Sánchez weighs up his next move after general election win

The split in the right-wing vote with the arrival of radical Vox saw the PP decline sharply and the Socialist PSOE make big gains

After victory in last Sunday's general election for his PSOE party, Pedro Sánchez will hold meetings with the main political leaders next week to find the best way for him to continue in power. The PSOE won 123 seats, up on the last election in 2016, but still short of a 176 majority.

Sánchez will need to pact in the Congreso to continue in the role of prime minister. But the party has said it prefers to first try to govern in minority, as before. Left-wing Unidas Podemos says it wants seats in Cabinet in return for its support.

The conservative Partido Popular is licking its wounds after its worst-ever national result, after the right-wing vote split three ways with the arrival of hard-right Vox. P2,3&4

Door opens for left-wing pact as PSOE wins general election and PP flops

:: SUR

MADRID. The Socialist PSOE was the clear winner in Sunday's general election, gaining 123 seats of the total of 350 in the Spanish Congreso, a large increase on its previous 84 seats and just as the opinion polls had been predicting.

The result was short of the 176 overall majority needed to govern alone but combined with the 42 seats obtained by the left-wing group Unidas Podemos, and the support of some of the minority regional groups, PSOE leader Pedro Sánchez is seemingly within easy reach of keeping his job as prime minister.

Split on the right

The other big news of election night was the dramatic decline in the number of seats of the conservative Partido Popular (PP). This was the first election for leader Pablo Casado who said the results had been "very bad" for his party. The party fell from 137 seats in the last election in 2016 to 66 last Sunday - its worst ever result.

Analysts blamed a split in the right-wing vote, with radical newcomers Vox gaining 24 seats, the first time they have been in parliament. Their final seat count was, however, less than many commentators had been expecting.

Centre-right Ciudadanos (Cs), under Albert Rivera, saw their seats shoot up to 57, which was 25 more than in 2016. This was just a few seats short of taking over the PP as the second-largest party and official opposition.

Sánchez decides next step

The PSOE leader will now hold a series of meetings with the leaders of the PP, Cs and Unidas Podemos looking to secure the support of their MPs in an investiture vote in the Congreso. The Congreso and the Senado (the upper house) must meet again on 21 May but there is no time limit on MPs then voting on a new government.

Sánchez's deputy, Carmen Calvo, said this week that rather than forming a coalition to secure an absolute majority, the Socialists preferred to rule as a minority government, just as they have been doing until now with just 84 seats since Sánchez ousted the PP's Mariano Rajoy in last year's vote of no confidence.

Although some big business was calling for the PSOE to go into coalition with Cs this week, Albert Rivera had already ruled out a pact with the PSOE during the election campaign. This leaves Unidas Podemos, the left-wing alliance of Podemos and Izquierda Unida, as the likely kingmaker, even though they did worse than in 2016. Leader of Podemos, Pablo Iglesias, said on Wednesday that he wouldn't allow the PSOE to govern in minority and that he would demand places in the Cabinet in a coalition government.

"There's not going to be a one-party government in Spain. The Spanish have said so, not us," explained Iglesias.

After the May elections

Sánchez is due to meet Casado on Monday, followed by Rivera and Iglesias on Tuesday. The PSOE has said it will wait until after the next elections on Sunday 26 May to form a government. Then, votes for town halls across the country take place as well as for the European parliament. There are also votes in most of Spain's autonomous regions. Sánchez doesn't want any pacts to influence his party's support in those elections.

Sensing voters in the 26 May elections may warm to a less right-wing PP, Pablo Casado has been toughening his rhetoric on Vox this week.

In Sunday's election, the winning PSOE received 29 per cent of the vote, followed by the PP on 17 per cent, Cs on 16 per cent, Unidas Podemos on 14 per cent and Vox 10 per cent. Other regional parties made up the difference.

There was also a surge in separatist left-wing MPs being returned from the Basque Country (with Bildu) and from Catalunya (with the ERC).

Voting also took place in the Senado. Here the PSOE won an overall majority of 121 in the 208-seat upper chamber - a result driven by the split of the right-wing vote. The PP had held a majority here for 23 years.

Valencia votes too

Sunday also saw the separate early election for the devolved parliament covering the Valencia region. Here the PSOE of regional leader Ximo Puig increased by four seats to 27 while their Podemos-affiliated partners in government, Compromís, dropped two regional seats.

WHAT HAPPENS NEXT? THE PARLIAMENTARY ROUTE TO CHOOSING THE NEXT PRIME MINISTER

► 21 May. MPs and Senators gather to constitute the new parliament (Las Cortes) in the Congreso (lower house) and Senado (upper house) in Madrid. The vote will take place for the Speakers.

► 26 May. Once the parliament has been formed, there's a period of five days for seats to be allocated on the cross-party committees that oversee the running of the day-to-day business, always a controversial process.

► Municipal, regional and European elections. In the middle of these negotiations towards the investiture of a new government, the super Sunday of elections falls on 26 May, with municipal, regional (in most areas) and European votes. It's likely that all parties will keep their cards on pacts close to their chests to avoid upsetting their voters.

► Meetings with the King. Felipe VI can start at any time his customary round of meetings with political leaders to designate a candidate for prime minister to be put in front of MPs. He's likely to do this in the first two weeks of June once both new legislative assemblies have met for the first time. Once he has met the leader of every party in the Congreso, more likely than not he will nominate Pedro Sánchez as candidate to be voted on by MPs since he leads the party with the biggest number of seats.

► Investiture. The date that MPs will vote on the candidate nominated by the King will depend on how well the PSOE leader's negotiations are going with other parties. There's no time limit to conclude talks and find a way to get enough MPs' support. The Socialist party candidate must get the votes of 176 MPs (an absolute majority) in a first vote. If that fails, in a second vote within 48 hours the conditions are easier and he needs to come out with the most votes when any absences are ignored.

► Repeating the general election. If Pedro Sánchez isn't successful in those initial investiture votes, the constitutional clock starts ticking towards new elections, which would be held two months later unless anybody else is nominated by the King and can win the support of enough MPs in the lower house in the meantime.

National picture repeated in Malaga province but here PSOE knock PP into third

Malaga and the Costa has been voting conservative in recent times, but a spilt of the vote on the right saw the Partido Popular lose significant ground

MALAGA. Three political parties competing for right-of-centre votes (instead of two parties last time), brought down the share of the conservative Partido Popular (PP) in Malaga province and the Costa del Sol in last Sunday's general election. In recent years the PP had been the most popular party locally.

Not only did Ciudadanos (Cs), the more centrist of the right-wing parties, gain more overall votes than the PP, but the surge in hard-right Vox took more voters from them.

Malaga province returns a total of 11 MPs to Madrid's Congreso. Once the count was in, the PSOE had four seats, up one on three years ago, Cs kept their two and the PP had lost two of its previous four. Unidas Podemos kept its two MPs and Vox won one local MP for the first time.

Although votes are added up on a provincial constituency level to decide on the 11 local MPs and not council area, an analysis by town hall district shows that voters put the PSOE as preferred party in all but a handful of the 103 municipal areas. The only exceptions were three small areas that voted for the PP (Canillas de Albaida, Igualdeja and Jimera de Libar) and four that gave top position to Unidas Podemos (Ariate, Casabermeja, Istán and Teba). One Costa municipality, Benahavis, narrowly put hard-right Vox as its favourite party, with 23.48 per cent of the vote in a very split field.

When all is added up, PSOE won 31 per cent of the vote in Malaga province, followed by Gs on 19.5 per cent, PP on almost 18 per cent, Unidas Podemos on 14.5 per cent and Vox close behind on 14 per cent.

Last Sunday's general election marked a turning point in national and most probably local politics. The overwhelming victory of the Socialist PSOE in the province of Malaga is bound to have made the numerous Partido Popular mayors uncomfortable and nervous about whether they get to keep their jobs after the municipal poll on 26 May.

In the city of Malaga, the PSOE candidate, Dani Pérez, is already claiming more ground and his vision of taking over the mayor's office seems more realistic than ever. The thousands of votes the local people gave his party last Sunday have given him wings.

COULD SUNDAY'S RESULT INDICATE A POLITICAL CHANGE IN OUR LOCAL TOWN HALLS?

JAVIER RECIO

This is the second consecutive election that the Socialists have been the most-voted party in the city, although this time the difference is significantly more comfortable.

Meanwhile though, the city's Ciudadanos (Cs) candidate, Juan Cassá, is also rubbing his hands together, after his group claimed the second success story of election night, overtaking the Partido Popular as the second most-voted party in a number of areas. If this trend were repeated on 26 May, the current PP mayor Paco de la Torre could find himself having to hand over his mayor's robes to Cassá if the council is to remain in the hands of the right wing, an ambition of which the local Ciudadanos leader has made no secret in recent years.

In fact Cs, known as the orange party, has overtaken the PP to become the greatest alternative to the Socialist PSOE in the majority of towns and villages in Malaga province. Among them are the significant examples of Marbella and Estepona, where the PP mayors Ángeles Muñoz and José María García Urbano have more reason now to fear for their jobs.

The Partido Popular hasn't even won in its talisman stronghold Fuengirola, where the PP normally triumphs election after election. It's true that in the local elections the candidates' reputation often goes before their political colours, but it's also true that on one hand, the PSOE is on a roll, and on the other, Ciudadanos could come out as the great beneficiary if the three right-wing parties decide to join forces to keep out the Socialists. If this were the case, the political map of the Costa del Sol could look decidedly orange after 26 May.

How will you benefit from the Andalucía tax reforms?

The local government has introduced new tax rules from 11 April, designed to position Andalucía as one of the lowest taxed regions in Spain. It is reducing the regional income tax rates every year from 2019 to 2023, and has established a 99% succession and gift tax relief for group I and II beneficiaries.

Marches across Spain mark International Workers' Day

The traditional May Day rallies called for a labour law reform to be repealed and salary equality

■ SUR

MÁLAGA. Large marches took place across Spain on Tuesday to mark the May Day public holiday, traditionally used to campaign for better rights for workers.

The main trade union groups organised some 70 demonstrations across the country for International Workers' Day under the slogan "1 May, the fight continues; rights, equality, cohesion. People first".

Marchers were calling for a labour-law reform enacted under the previous conservative government to be repealed, as they consider it too generous to employers, and were also highlighting the pay gap between the sexes and the need for more stable work contracts.

As usual, there were marches across the Andalucía region, including Seville and Málaga, where thousands took part.

Venezuelan rebel leader goes to Spanish embassy to seek refuge

■ SUR

MÁDRID. The uprising in Venezuela against Nicolás Maduro this week has put the Spanish government in an awkward position as a main opposition leader arrived in its Caracas embassy to seek refuge.

Leopoldo López was freed from jail by rebels in the early hours of Tuesday and, after brief appearances around the city with rebel troops, made his way to the embassy when it became clear that the bulk of the military would not back a rebellion. López hasn't claimed asylum and is staying as a "guest", it was said.

Spain, like many countries, has been calling for an end to Maduro's regime that has brought economic hardship to Venezuela. Deputy prime minister, Carmen Calvo, said this week that Spain wants to see peaceful regime change, distancing the government from the violence.

A DIFFERENCE OF DEGREE

Pedro Sánchez has strengthened his grip on power, upping the Socialist PSOE's number of seats in Congreso from 84 to 123 in last Sunday's general election. It was a deserved win for the PSOE leader, who had vowed to keep far-right newcomer Vox out of government in a tightly-contested vote. Sánchez has honoured that pledge, but his days of relying on the support of other parties aren't over: the PSOE is still short of the 176 seats needed for a parliamentary majority. If Sánchez's last stint as prime minister was hampered by cross-party compromise, his next is likely to be problematic for the same reason.

All eyes now have now turned to Unidas Podemos (UP), the leftist group led by Pablo Iglesias which came in fourth place on Sunday, taking 14.3% of the vote and 42 seats in Congreso (down from 71). Iglesias' party is the natural parliamentary ally for Sánchez, but a coalition between the two would still be eleven short of a majority. As a result, it would depend on the support of Catalan and Basque parties, who would make demands that Sánchez has already shown himself unwilling to satisfy. Indeed, it was precisely his refusal to grant a legal referendum on secession in Catalonia that triggered Sunday's early election.

There would also be pragmatic differences between the two main forces in a leftist coalition, even though the PSOE and UP share a lot of common ground. Sánchez and Iglesias were able to team up last autumn to draft a progressive spending plan for this year, albeit one that never saw the light of day because of lack of support from Catalan separatist parties. Between them, they also secured an unprecedented 22% increase in Spain's minimum wage, up from €736 to €900 a month.

Sánchez and Iglesias are also both in favour of increased taxes on corporations and wealthy individuals and greater public spending. Yet there would be differences of degree between the two party leaders, with UP likely to push for even higher levels of public investment and taxation than those favoured by the PSOE. A conflict would develop between the values of a Socialist party firmly placed in the political mainstream, and a radical group that has previously tried to replace the PSOE as the strongest force on the Spanish left. Neither will want to be seen as moving too far in the other's direction.

One thing, though, will make Sánchez's life easier this time around. On Sunday, the PSOE made a historic breakthrough in the Senate, parliament's upper house, gaining an absolute majority after 25 years of dominance by the conservative Popular Party. At least if Sánchez manages to move legislation to that stage during his next term, he won't encounter further problems. The difficulties, though, will consist in getting that far.

The number of women victims of gender violence supported in the local area is on the up

ALBERTO GÓMEZ

✉ agalmendres@diariosur.es

In Malaga province, 52 women and children in their care were looked after by IAM from January to March, compared to 45 cases a year a go

MALAGA. Until 2003 there were no statistics about the number of women killed by gender violence in Spain. No official figures exist before that date. The victims were invisible. Since then, though, the statistics have been startling: 993 women have died in 16 years in Spain, more than those killed by ETA terrorists. That's why the new director of the Instituto Andaluz de la Mujer, Andalusian institute for women (IAM), Mercedes Sánchez Vico, calls this "State terrorism", and things don't seem to be getting any better. The IAM is part of the Junta regional government.

In the first three months of this year, the IAM's shelter and assis-

THE DATA

► Gender violence. The number of victims of gender violence attended by the IAM has risen by 21 per cent in Andalucía and 13 per cent in Malaga in the first three months of this year, compared with the same period in 2018.

► Assistance. The assistance is provided on three levels: emergency centres, shelters and apartments. In Malaga the IAM has 12 apartments with 40 bedrooms and 90 beds.

► Grants. The Junta de Andalucía has announced an increase in the funding for associations which prevent or fight to combat gender violence and to achieve real equality.

tance service has helped 254 women who were suffering from gender violence, which is an increase of 28 per cent compared with the same period last year.

In Malaga province there were 52 cases between January and March, including women and their young children, compared with 45 in the first three months of 2018. That is an increase of 13.4 per cent.

"We cannot close our eyes to what is happening," says Mercedes Sánchez Vico. She says there is a need to educate people equally to "put an end to this awful situation, which is getting worse despite everything that has been done so far".

The IAM offers legal, psychologi-

Budget for women's information centres has risen to nearly 13 million

✉ A. GÓMEZ

MALAGA. Women's information centres in many municipalities (CMIMs) in the province will receive nearly 13 million euros in 2019 to provide further assistance to women in general, but especially the victims of gender violence. The grants paid by the Andalusian institute for women

(IAM) to town halls and other authorities for maintaining the 174 centres for women amount to 8.5 million euros, the same as last year, but there will be a further 4.2 million from the cross-party agreement against gender violence, raising the total to more than 12.7 million euros.

"It is so important that all women have access to a centre for information, advice and assistance for victims, with qualified staff, in every municipality in Andalucía, and that is why we are creating and reinforcing new centres of this type," says Rocio Ruiz, the Minister for Equality, Social Policies and Conciliation. She says these funds will mean that any council, no matter how small the village, that wants to provide this service will be able to do so.

"These initiatives are very satisfying, especially as this is something we have been able to put into effect right from the moment we started to govern in Andalucía," she says.

cal, social and educational advice to victims of gender violence at its emergency centres, shelters and apartments run by the Agise company, which operate 24 hours a day all year round.

If under-18s are included in the figures, the number of people assisted in Andalucía so far this year is 489, which is 21 per cent higher than in 2018. These are women, sometimes accompanied by their children, "whose lives are in danger because of their situations and they need to escape," explains Mercedes, and she says that although the victims are "totally destroyed when they arrive, they are given help to recover their independence, if they have lost it, and to become survivors instead of victims".

Malaga is the third province in Andalucía in terms of assistance being requested so far this year. The IAM service has helped 41 women in Almería, 54 in Cadiz, 61 in Córdoba, 83 in Granada, 31 in Huelva, 66 in Jaén, 52 in Malaga and 101 in Seville.

Increased funding

These figures are worrying for the Andalusian government, which has announced an increase in funding to combat gender violence. The IAM will be spending two million euros, an increase of 700,000, on assistance for non-profit-making organisations which help women at risk, and also injecting 500,000 euros into associations which present projects to prevent or fight against gender violence, and 1.5 million euros for organisations which work "to achieve true equality".

The assistance and shelter service has 78 apartments with 231 bedrooms and 471 beds in total, and this has enabled it to handle the increased number of cases "with no problem".

This facility, which tries to re-establish the rights of women who have suffered gender violence, provides three levels of assistance: emergency centres, shelters and apartments.

Special phone number

The IAM coordinates its services through the provincial women's centres and the phone number 900 200 999, which victims of gender violence and their children can ring anonymously and in full confidentiality.

The emergency centres provide protection for women who have suffered or are at risk of domestic violence and their children, guaranteeing them immediate shelter and emergency assistance at any time of day or night. The specialist staff evaluate each case individually and take the action considered most appropriate.

The shelters are residential centres which provide full social, psychological and legal assistance the women need in order to recover from the violence to which they have been subjected. The apartments are for use by families.

IN BRIEF

Six years for attempted rape at a Marbella bus stop

MALAGA

:: Á. FRÍAS. A man has been sentenced to six years in prison for the attempted rape of a 21-year-old woman at a Marbella bus stop in May last year. The attack happened at dusk when the victim was waiting for the bus at a stop on the main A-7 road at Rio Real.

The man approached the woman and threatened her with a knife. He was only stopped from going further with his attack when the bus came into view. The court found that the man's alibi was false and that the victim's testimony was highly credible.

Hitman held on the way to carrying out a kidnap on the Costa

MALAGA

:: Á. F. A joint operation between Spanish and Polish police has led to the arrest of a man purportedly on his way to Marbella to kidnap a victim as part of score-settling between rival gangs.

Sources said that the detainee is a dangerous Polish hitman with a record of kidnap, wounding and drug trafficking, and is linked to organised crime on the Costa del Sol. He was held in Barcelona when travelling with three body guards and 100,000 euros cash.

Driver injured after lorry overturns in La Cala de Mijas

MALAGA

:: A. NOGUÉS. A lorry overturned on the A-7 motorway in La Cala de Mijas early last Friday causing a 10-kilometre tail-back and disrupting rush hour traffic. The accident happened at 4.50am when the lorry hit the central reservation and overturned and at one point the traffic stretched back as far as Fuengirola.

The driver of the truck, a 25-year-old man, was injured and taken to the Costa del Sol hospital for treatment.

Two UK nationals have been arrested in San Pedro and Mijas as drugs are discovered hidden in local lockups

CHARO MÁRQUEZ

MARBELLA. The operation followed the usual pattern - bringing hashish from Africa and hiding it on the Costa del Sol or in the Campo de Gibraltar. But the twist was moving it on to the region of Extremadura where it was vacuum packed and hidden among oranges being shipped to Britain.

Two of the five arrested, according to police sources, are Britons living in San Pedro Alcántara and Mijas. The hashish was first hidden in lockups near the coast, "with heavy security to avoid any police action". Once the gang was sure the Guardia Civil drug team wasn't watching, it was then taken inland to Trujillanos, a small village in Extremadura some 300km away.

According to the investigation, an industrial unit with good road access was put under police watch after it was discovered that the suspects had a record in drug trafficking but also had several companies used for the apparently legal transport of fruit to the UK.

One of the two Britons was held at Malaga Airport where he was making a business trip. Police say that some 1.5 tonnes of hashish was involved.

Half a tonne of waste removed from beaches*NERJA

■ E. CABEZAS. Around 50 volunteers participated in a clean-up of Nerja's beaches last Saturday. Those taking part used motorboats and kayaks to remove half a tonne of waste from the cliffs and beaches of Nerja during the event.

Plastics from local greenhouses, tyres, bottles, cans, plastic bags and wet wipes were among the items removed from the popular holiday resort's coast during the second event of its kind. The day was organised by Nerja-based company, ProAventura, in collaboration with the town hall and other local firms.

The volunteers were invited to a free paella at the Ayo beach bar on Burriana beach after the session as a thank you for their hard work. It is expected that further events will be organised in the future.

Residents say lack of police led to burglaries*RINCÓN DE LA VICTORIA

■ E. C. Residents of the Cantal neighbourhood in Rincón de la Victoria are blaming a recent spate of burglaries on the lack of police presence in the area. At least 12 break-ins have occurred in the last two weeks and one neighbour, Juan Martín, told SUR that home owners are taking it in turns to patrol the area at night, but said that the crimes occur during the day when "most people are at work".

20-year-old woman rescued from fire*CANILLAS DE ALBAIDA

■ E. C. A 20-year-old woman was rescued from a fire in her home in the village of Canillas de Albaida last Sunday. Neighbours noticed flames coming from the first floor of the building where the woman was asleep. The other three homes in the building were empty at the time. Rescuers, who included the village's mayor, Jorge Martín, managed to wake the woman and bring her to safety.

Frigiliana town hall votes to take action over controversial phone mast after 20 years of protests

Previous administrations ignored residents' calls for the structure to be taken down, despite a number of cancer cases thought to be linked to its presence

■ EUGENIO CABEZAS

FRIGILIANA. During its last plenary session in April, Frigiliana town hall voted to start judicial proceedings against the two mobile phone operators that use a mast situated in the historic centre of the village.

The structure is situated in the grounds of the village's public nursery and is also very close to other public buildings including the health centre, library and Casa de la Cultura cultural centre.

Protests and petitions

The mast, which is used by mobile phone companies Orange and Vodafone, was installed in 1999 for a period of 50 years. However, it has been the subject of criticism and protests by residents in the village who believe that more than 20 cases of cancer have been caused by the mast's presence since it was installed. In 2014 a petition with 500 signatures asking for the council to remove it was delivered to the town hall by angry residents.

The mast was installed more than 20 years ago. ■ E. CABEZAS

The town hall receives 6,500 euros per year in rent from the companies and previous administrations have failed to act on the residents' protests.

A former mayor, Javier López, claimed that emissions from the mast fell "within the limits given by the ministry for industry". However, current mayor, Alejandro Herero, said after the plenary session that it wasn't "just a matter of health" but that the mast needs to be relocated for "aesthetic reasons", adding, "We can't have that structure in the middle of the village, with those dimensions."

The town hall says it is looking at alternative locations for the mast, with councillors voting for it to be at least 200 metres away from public spaces. The mayor has also said that the council is prepared to pay up to 50,000 euros towards the cost of moving it to a different location.

Jail for 54-year-old who sexually abused young girl with learning difficulties

■ A. F.

MÁLAGA. A 54-year-old man has been given a seven-year prison sentence for a series of sexual assaults carried out in 2013 in a village in the Axarquía to a 14-year-old with learning difficulties.

The events came to light after the victim approached her school teacher after a sex education class and explained that what had been taught in class had happened to her.

During the trial in Málaga, judges heard that the man took advantage of the girl's disability to lure her to an empty house in the Axarquía, where he sexually abused her. Due to her learning difficulties the victim was unaware that the man's behaviour was inappropriate, the court heard.

The accused denied all allegations. However, judges said that the girl's testimony was "entirely credible." The man was also ordered to pay 5,000 euros compensation to the victim.

Record number of parties field candidates for local elections in Vélez-Málaga

■ E. C.

VÉLEZ-MÁLAGA. A record number of political parties are fielding candidates for the forthcoming local elections in Vélez-Málaga. Twelve parties, the highest number since Spain became a democracy 40 years ago, will be represented.

Across the rest of the Axarquía, in Rincón de la Victoria, eight parties are vying for votes, while in Nerja there are eight and in Torrox, five. By contrast, in nine of the Axarquía's villages (Canillas de Albaida, Canillas de Aceituno, Iznate, Salares, Sayalonga, Alfarnatejo, Riogordo, Cútar and Comares) only two parties, the socialist PSOE, which won the majority of votes in last Sunday's general election, and the centre-right Partido Popular, will be standing.

The elections take place on Sunday 26 May.

Go-ahead for landmark Malaga building to become a 5-star hotel

:: P. MARTÍNEZ / J. HINOJOSA

MALAGA. Tourism inspectors from the Junta de Andalucía have given the green light for a well-known building in the centre of Malaga to be turned into a hotel. The building, known locally as La Equitativa, is easily recognisable opposite the end of the main Calle Larios on the Alameda. For the moment, the lower part of the largely disused building will become a five-star property with 88 bedrooms after an investment of seven million euros. The conversion is expected to take two years.

The tower will not be part of the project and a separate plan for a hotel from different investors is also being drawn up for that part.

The initial scheme for the lower part will be funded by Key International, a Miami-based fund linked to a wealthy Spanish family.

Last month the city council gave planning permission but the project was awaiting permission from the Junta to be rated as having five stars. Written agreement came this Tuesday.

The building was constructed in the 1950s on the site of the old mansion house of the Larios family. It will include a ground floor shop unit and a top floor restaurant.

Work starts on much-needed migrant reception centre in Malaga port

The temporary police facility will handle up to 300 people near the quayside to cope with demand when boats are found crossing from Africa

:: ÁLVARO FRÍAS

MALAGA. Work for the National Police has begun on the construction of a temporary prefab centre to receive immigrants arriving unexpectedly at Malaga port. Until now migrants crossing to Europe from Africa, whether arriving on the shore by boat or picked up by rescue vessels, have had to wait in flimsy covered areas on the port side or other locations in the city.

Now, in an attempt to improve conditions for the new arrivals, the centre will house up to 300 people for the legal 72-hour time period under police guard to give time for initial paperwork to be carried out.

The local Red Cross has praised the centre but said more longer-term facilities are needed.

Contract for another new Las Lagunas car park is awarded by Mijas council

MIJAS

■ I. GELIBTER. Mijas council has awarded the construction contract for an underground car park in the La Candelaria area of Las Lagunas, the largest of the new parking facilities being built in the area. The work will cost 7.8 million euros and will be carried out by OHL. It is expected to take 18 months.

The new car park is part of a strategic plan to improve parking in the heavily built-up residential and commercial area near the waterpark. Another underground car park is being built at nearby El Juncal for 3.3 million euros.

At La Candelaria, there will be four storeys below ground level and a total of 506 spaces. Across the two new car parks there will be 700 extra spaces.

Mayor Juan Carlos Maldonado asked for residents to be "patient" while the improvements are made.

Survey places Malaga low down list of cities with cleanest streets

MALAGA

■ SUR. A survey of cleanliness in Spain's largest cities, carried out by a consumer watchdog, has placed Malaga near the bottom.

The national average mark given by analysts to Spanish cities was 53, down two points on the last survey four years ago. Of the 60 places studied, Malaga came 46th with an average mark of 42. What most worried survey respondents about Malaga was dog dirt in the city centre and the outskirts.

Oviedo was the Spanish city with the best mark of 79 followed by Bilbao (77), Vigo (76) and Logroño on 74. The worst two cities were Alicante on 34 and Jaén on 31.

The survey took into account various factors, including the type of management and spend per inhabitant, and compared it to users' own experiences.

Joining forces to make Marbella an even better place for everyone to live

The fourth annual United Nationalities Marbella Summit on 14 May will see residents putting their heads together to improve the town

ASH BOLTON

MARBELLA. A community forum to help improve the lives of local residents is being held in Marbella on Tuesday 14 May.

The fourth annual United Nationalities Marbella Summit is a free event which will focus on what the 137 different nationalities who live in the town can do to help each other make it a better place.

Hosted by TV and radio presenter Nicole King, the meeting is an opportunity for locals to share new ideas and network.

Previous events have seen the successful introduction of schemes such as the Zero Hero campaign, where 13 bars and restaurants in Marbella now give free soft drinks to "designated drivers".

Speaking to SUR in English, Nicole King said: "We have 147 nationalities living in Marbella and some of the most privileged brains on the planet getting together to brainstorm and ensure that we keep Marbella up to the standard we've all come to expect, which is why we need you there!"

This year's event will include progressing the Zero Hero campaign, making Marbella more sustainable, supporting isolated community members and improving the interaction between businesses and charities.

Nicole added that this year the event will focus on improving the lives of teenagers in Marbella.

She explained: "Marbella now has a reputation not just for sun, sea and beautiful homes, but also for fabulous schools, making it an ideal town for families. This is true with perhaps the exception of our teens. This year's summit aims to address the creation of; suitable hang out spaces, non-alcoholic discotheques, other suitable activities and cultural events for this age group."

A number of dignitaries will also be present at the event including the British Consul for Malaga, Charmaine Arbouin, the mayor of Marbella, Ángeles Muñoz, and the Danish Consul for Malaga, Marisa Moreno Castillo.

In addition, the charities Triple A, Age Concern and Debra, will also have stands at the event and other voluntary groups will attend.

Half-built hotel at Doña Julia Golf in Casares to finally be finished by PlatinumEstates

CHARO MARTÍNEZ

CASARES. A failed hotel project in Casares that left an unfinished eyesore on the landscape is finally going to have a future. Hong Kong-based Platinum Estates has bought the golfside site with its Spanish partners at Doña Julia, including the 50,000 square-metre shell of the building.

The investors will spend 50 million euros completing the building and turning it into a 200-suite property alongside the golf course. The original project was called Park Hyatt Casares Golf & Spa but financial problems saw the developer go bust. The site has now been bought from the bank.

Platinum Estates has also bought an extra 11,000 square metres nearby "at a good price" to develop as a shopping area.

The group hopes to finish the work within a year and a half and eventually create 300 to 400 full-time jobs. It says that it is in discussion with various top hotel operators who may be interested in running the new hotel.

A day of luxury in Malaga Port

Five cruises were visiting at the same time on Saturday, three of them truly exclusive

Together, they carried 4,400 passengers, far from the 13,200 who arrived on four ships on 11 April, the busiest day in terms of visitors

:: PILAR MARTÍNEZ

MALAGA. For those who love luxury, the port in Malaga city was a joy to behold on Saturday. In fact, it was a day to remember, not just because an unusual number of cruise liners were visiting at the same time, bringing a wave of passengers into the city centre or to the buses which would take them to other destinations in the area, but because three of the five ships in port were the very height of luxury. Truly exclusive vessels, in fact.

Malaga is becoming an increasingly popular destination for these types of visitors, who travel the high seas in ships which bear little resemblance to the classic idea of a cruise liner. In fact, last year half of the ships which called into Malaga Port were of this type, and they have the added advantage of being able to anchor on El Palmeral, bringing their passengers within just a few metres of the historic city centre.

The three luxury ships which moored in Malaga on Saturday were headed by the Royal Clipper, from the shipyard which builds the biggest sailing ships in the world and a regular visitor to Malaga. In 2013 the company began offering people a new way of travelling by sea, in a sailing ship, and placing the port of the Costa del Sol's capital city firmly on the map of luxury cruisers. At 132 metres long, the Royal Clipper is considered the largest sailing ship in the world and is the only one with five masts and a total of 42 sails.

With this ship the concept of a cruise was transformed into a form of active and interactive tourism at sea, because it is the only one in which passengers can take part in sailing her if they wish, including climbing one of the masts, despite its 54-metre height. From the outside she resembles sailing ships of the past, but the interior is equipped with the latest technology and all types of facilities including a spa, gym and beauty centre in an area below sea level. The ship, which can be powered by sails or engine, has a maximum capacity of 228 passengers.

Next to her, in the spot usually used by the Melillero, was Seadream I, a luxury yacht belonging to the SeaDream Yacht Club company. This is an exclusive boutique ship, owned by the company which was founded in 2001 and owns the only two boutique ships in the world. This type of ship, designed for passengers with extremely high spending power, is notable for the proportion of crew members to passengers, because there are 95 people employed to look after a maximum of 112 passengers. There is a golf simulator on board, bicycles to use in the ports, and the passengers can go kayaking and jetskiing.

On the Levante quay, the array of luxury was completed by the Wind Surf, the ship which inaugurated El Palmeral on Muelle 2 in 2012. She is another sailing ship, and has four masts reaching 52 metres in height.

These prestigious visitors were joined by Mein Schiff 1 and Prinsendam on Saturday, followed on Sunday by another luxury cruise ship, the Viking Jupiter, which was visiting Malaga for the first time.

Megayacht, Gene Machine, belonging to scientist and businessman Jonathan Rothberg also joined the party, docking in Malaga on Wednesday.

IN BRIEF

Plans announced for new 'Blue Path' leading out to sea

LA CALA DEL MORAL

:: A. M. ROMERO. Malaga should make better use of its sea as a tourist attraction, said Francisco Salado, the head of the provincial government, this week, at an event to mark the Day of the Province in La Cala del Moral. He announced plans for a new project, the 'Senda Azul', or Blue Path, which will do precisely that. "We need to raise awareness of the wealth of marine life in the province and protect and investigate archaeological remains, create artificial reefs and use wrecks, not only to protect marine flora and fauna but also to create new nautical, sports and tourist attractions," he explained. The Senda Azul will be a footpath leading from land out to sea, and will be created once the Coastal Path has been completed.

Three municipalities have 25% of all rural accommodation

MALAGA

:: P. MARTÍNEZ. Three municipalities are home to 25 per cent of all rural holiday accommodation in Malaga province, according to a report on sustainable tourism which was released by the Costa del Sol Tourist Board this week. Frigiliana heads the list, followed by Ronda and then Cómpeta. Frigiliana offers 432 properties, Ronda 395 and Cómpeta has 239. In terms of guests, however, the situation changes slightly. Ronda has accommodation for 4,719 people, Antequera 2,687 and Frigiliana 2,444. Together, these account for 30 per cent of the total in the province. The rural tourism sector attracted 1.1 million visitors last year, mainly from other parts of Spain, the UK, Germany and France.

"Brexit is stupid and I believe it will end with a second referendum"

José Luis Bonet President of the Spanish Chamber of Commerce

@JJSotoT

The president of the Chamber of Commerce talks about small and medium businesses and says digitalisation is the way forward

MÁLAGA. You could almost call José Luis Bonet a 'bubbly' businessman (he is joint president of Freixenet), and he is also the president of the Spanish Chamber of Commerce. He has just been re-elected to that post for the next four years and chose Malaga as one of his first visits, to see the advances in the province's business network at first hand. Despite a busy schedule, he also made time for this interview with SUR. Bonet says he knows the city well and is very complimentary about the changes it has undergone. During the interview, he often repeats the words 'digitalisation' and 'internationalisation', like a type of mantra for business owners.

–Were you aware of the changes which have taken place in Malaga in recent years?

–I have links with Malaga because one of my sisters-in-law and her husband live here, and my daughter and son-in-law live in Torremolinos, with my three grandchildren. I like Malaga very much and I believe it is one of Spain's most up-and-coming cities. The growth in recent years is very evident.

–What is the main purpose of this visit?

–I came for a meeting with the executive committee of the Malaga Chamber of Commerce, but I've also taken the opportunity to make some visits, such as to the Digital Content Hub, which is impressive and, I believe, ahead of the rest. I think it is a great initiative which will have very positive consequences for people, and that's what is important. Digitalisation is extremely necessary and those who don't adapt to it won't do as well as they should.

–How do you see the business network in Malaga?

–My view is that Malaga is a thriving, forward-looking city which is well oriented and those who are responsible for that, fundamentally the mayor, deserve to be congratulated. What they are doing is obviously going in the right direction, and of course we mustn't forget tourism, which is evident everywhere you look.

–When you mention digitalisation, what do you mean?

–In Malaga they are doing a great job in this field. In fact many companies have survived the crisis thanks to this process of digitalisation. Those that don't join in will be left out of the game. The chambers of commerce can do a great deal to help with digitalisation, especially for small and medium businesses, because the major chains are already doing it and have been for some time.

–Do you believe that at present there is an equal balance between different commercial models?

–No. It is unbalanced because Spain is a country of small and medium businesses, but you're talking to a businessman from a medium-sized family firm which is run by relatives and has become a world leader, above all thanks to my uncle José Ferrer Sala. And that is the aim for businesses: to survive, make progress and win.

Future

–How do you see the future of small businesses? In Malaga many are closing down.

–More traditional types of business mustn't disappear, they should reinvent themselves and adapt to the times. It is very clear that they need to come into the digital world if they are not to disappear. What we need to do is make small and medium businesses aware of this so that they take that step.

–How do you convince them?

–Businesses need to realise that everything is digitalised these days, and they should trust institutions which support the business world such as the chambers of commerce. We, in the Spanish one, have set up a digitalisation committee which, among other things, has produced a small guide for business owners and informs them about all the assistance which is available to them. It is also good that there are synergies with institutions like, for example, the Digital Content Hub in Malaga.

–What do you think are the main challenges for small businesses?

–Above all training, because that revolves around people's talents; globalisation, to which they must adapt, and digitalisation. They should also put into effect processes of innovation such as creating their brand, which is where the added value lies, and realise that strong entities are necessary to represent them. The chambers of commerce work on their behalf with the institutions, and that is very important in a system which has functioned the way the Spanish one does.

–How has the business world, which is very vulnerable to changes, been affected by the recent elections?

–Any changes affect it, but what is good is that the business sector works on its own initiative. It is always best if there is certainty in the political sphere; a company needs governments which are not volatile. Businesses did their homework, but it is best for us to have a stable political framework.

–How have they reacted to the change in the Andalucía regional government, in particular?

–With normality, because that is what democracy is about. We'll have to see what happens now. Companies will carry on as usual and see how things go, and then decide whether to vote for them again or not. It's too early to evaluate yet.

–And what about things like Brexit? On the Costa del Sol many people are worried about the effect that could have.

–Brexit is a very bad thing. It is stupid. It is trying to say something, but it's not very intelligent. You have to respect that there was a referendum, but they should reconsider. My impression is that this will end with a second referendum, so people can choose sensibly once they have seen how bad it is. It would be very bad for the Europeans and for the citizens of the UK.

–Is it similar to the Catalan situation, which you are very familiar with?

–It can be seen that the independence process isn't going anywhere, but there are people who are determined that they want independence and it is important to reach an agreement. We all need to work together on things which help people, such as training, internationalisation and digitalisation.

–Does this sort of thing affect local businesses?

–Of course, it affects everyone because it impoverishes. It is very important to work as hard as possible on achieving dialogue so that people act rationally.

Torremolinos shopping area gets special status to stimulate regeneration

More than 200 businesses spread across 19 streets including iconic Calle San Miguel and La Nogalera can now apply for extra grants

:: ALBERTO GÓMEZ

TORREMOLINOS. The central shopping area of Torremolinos has been officially designated a 'centro comercial abierto' (open-air shopping centre). The title, approved by the Junta regional government, means firms in the heart of the resort can apply for special grants to stimulate trade and investment and operate under a unifying brand to attract more shoppers.

The scheme is called Torremolinos Abierto and has been driven by the local shopkeepers and traders association, ACET. President of the group, Juan Vallejo, explained that the area has been steadily improving its facilities in recent years.

"It's been 19 years of dedication during which time ACET has been 'collecting points' to reach this distinction," he said.

Mayor José Ortiz said it was "a fundamental step" in the regeneration of the town.

Alhaurín man first Spaniard to be "Living Legend" in Louisiana for Cajun cultural work

:: FERNANDO TORRES

ALHAURÍN DE LA TORRE. A historian from Alhaurín de la Torre has become the first Spaniard to be named a "Living Legend" for his research into the unique Cajun culture in the southern US state of Louisiana.

Before José Manuel de Molina began his work, the influence of Malaga in the culture of the Deep South was largely forgotten. However, research using old documents led De Molina to discover colonists from the area. In reward for his work in helping understand the Arcadian and Cajun culture, he was given his award by the Acadian Museum in Erath, Louisiana.

De Molina explained that before his research, local people linked their traditions to the French, but that now they understood that even some of their music and dance had roots in the traditional 'verdiales' in Malaga province.

Government pays tribute to Gib Second World War evacuees

DEBBIE BARTLETT

✉ debbieb.editorial@gmail.com

The entire civilian population had to be evacuated, and a documentary has been made about those who went to Madeira

GIBRALTAR. On behalf of the government, the deputy chief minister, Dr Joseph Garcia, recently paid tribute to the generation of Gibraltarians who were evacuated during the Second World War. He spoke before the screening of a documentary called Atlantic Exile which covers the evacuation to Madeira.

The hour-long documentary was directed by Portuguese film-maker Pedro Mesquita and produced by Amanda Alvarez of IInfiel Films and Kontratiempo Films. It tells the story of the evacuation through interviews with the evacuees themselves and includes photographs, footage and documents from the time.

The cinema was packed for the screening. :: GOVERNMENT OF GIBRALTAR

The entire civilian population of Gibraltar, the women, children, elderly and infirm were evacuated first to Casablanca in May 1940, then back to Gibraltar after France capitulated, and then evacuated again. Some were sent to Jamaica, others to London or Northern Ireland and about 2,000 of the 16,000 evacuees went to the Portuguese Atlantic island of Madeira.

In his speech, Dr Garcia expressed sadness that many of the evacuees, including some who featured in the documentary, are no longer with us, but said the film was nonetheless a fitting tribute to their memory.

He explained that the evacuation was a watershed moment in the political development of Gibraltar and in its evolution as a people. The men who stayed behind to fight the war, and their families who were sent away, developed a strong sense of identity which led to demands for greater self-government and greater control over their own affairs once the war was over.

The cinema was packed for the screening, to the extent that a smaller room had to be used for the overspill.

Unemployment rose by 7,900 in Malaga province in the first three months of this year

Unemployment went up to 17.46 per cent and the number of people in work fell by 3,000 according to the EPA active population survey

by JUAN SOTO

MALAGA. The first quarter of this year brought bad news for employment in the province. According to figures from the EPA (active population survey), 7,900 more people registered as unemployed between 1 January and 31 March, and the unemployment rate rose to 17.46 per cent. Although there were 51,100 more people in work than during the same period in 2018, this report from the national institute of Statistics shows that the province ended the first three months of the year with 136,900 people looking for work, compared with 129,000 at the end of last year. The number of people with jobs was also lower, by 3,000.

The rise in unemployment was partly due to the increase in the active population (+4,800) and the drop in people in work (-3,000). The growth in the number of people looking for their first job in the province is especially significant, as it reached

Survey of Active Population Malaga

(x 1,000)

10,800 in the first quarter of this year, 2,100 more than in the previous three months.

By sector, construction and industry did best as the percentage of employed workers increased (from 9.2 to 9.7 in the construction sector) compared with the drop of 5,800 in services and, to a lesser extent, in agriculture. This was partly due to Easter being later this year, as that had an effect on the contracts issued for temporary bar and restaurant staff.

With these figures, Malaga is now lagging behind other parts of Andalucía, because only Malaga, Seville and Cadiz saw a fall in the number of employees. In fact, at a global level there was an increase of 15,900 in the region to 3,106,200, and the number of unemployed was 829,500, which is 21.08 per cent of the total population. In relative terms, Andalucía is among the regions with the biggest increase in employment this year, 0.52 per cent, behind only Extremadura and the Basque Country. It is also one of the regions where employment rose in the past year, ahead of Catalonia and Madrid.

The Malaga business confederation said it is normal for unemployment to rise in the first quarter, so the interannual figures can be considered positive. However, Patricia Laguna of the CCOO trade union said vigorous policies are needed to increase permanent employment and overcome job instability.

The high-end residential property sector created 5,000 jobs in 2018

by CHARO MÁRQUEZ

ESTEPONA. A luxury villa is a small to medium business in itself. Not only does its design and construction generate employment, but so does its later use, and as a result the high end residential property sector is now said to be the leading industry on the Costa del Sol. The association 'DOM3 Empresarios para la Vivienda de Alta Calidad' points out that this sector generated 450 million euros last year, of which 175 million were taxes, and created 5,000 permanent and 15,000 indirect jobs.

The 'Golden Triangle' formed by Marbella, Estepona and Benahavís has the highest volume of this type of business. In 2018 more than 100 luxury villas and high end apartments were built in this area.

The president of DOM3, Laura Pou, says an apartment is considered top of the range if it costs around 600,000 euros, and a villa two million euros, with other factors taken into account such as quality, design, architecture, location, technology and energy efficiency, among others. "We are keen to ensure that maximum standards of quality apply to this type of property, from start to finish," she says.

Many purchasers are foreigners, including British, Belgian, French and Swiss, but this type of property in this area is also popular with Spanish buyers.

Car mayhem

In response to scooter mayhem (by Marjorie Evans, April 26th):

I think it is time to have a cull on the seemingly ever-growing car population that has taken over Malaga and other cities around the globe. The number of them that there are now in cities is now in my opinion far too much.

It was only the other day that a car nearly hit me on my bike, when I was biking on a bike lane... it almost ran over me... I just don't understand why people in cars often think they are invincible and just park everywhere, like on bike lanes, in pedestrian areas, narrow streets, or even parks. Not to mention the trash that people leave behind.

If people would responsibly use cars they would not drive into cities where people are walking. I just don't understand why people use their car for short distances. For instance in Malaga the city is so flat you can just bike everywhere! It is very fast and it a fantastic alternative for polluting cars and trucks, and by the way, it is very healthy (read: increasing diabetes).

It would definitely help in providing a more sustainable transport. Amazing what cargo bikes can do. I just can't wait for a bigger car-free centre of Malaga like in other towns around the world. Fewer car crashes, fewer asthmatic patients, fewer one-percar journeys, less my-car-first behaviour and less standing-still metal in the street (90% of the time).

Dear Marjorie Evans, it seems people cannot use their cars correctly. Would you go and park somewhere else please?

New roads

I'm pleased someone has realised that making it easier to get to small villages will help stop people from moving away. Then perhaps young people won't be forced to move away when they get their first job, normally on the Costa, relegating the village to weekends and holidays. You only have to ask residents in large Costa towns - they all have a "pueblo" that they, or their parents, grew up in.

Summer sails

PETER EDGERTON
MUSIC MAKER WWW.E-PETER.COM

At the time of writing there's a forty-million-dollar yacht called The Gene Machine moored up in Malaga's swanky, if rather generic, port. Apparently it belongs to a scientist chap who named it after one of his most important fields of work - machines. Only joking, genes.

This is baffling to me on almost every conceivable level. If you had a few bob to spare, why in earth would you spend it on a boat? A boat that you'd probably end up using only a couple of times a year, once the initial thrill had worn off. If you fancy pinging round the Greek islands once in a while, surely you could just hire a yacht whenever the whim descended.

Anyway, let's say you are, indeed, mad as a box of frogs and go ahead with the purchase, why then would you spend 40 million dollars on it? I mean, I don't think anyone could really tell the difference between, say, a 10-million-dollar boat and one worth four times that unless they were some kind of yacht-obsessed anorak freak, holed up in their pizza-box-strewn bedroom reading Yachting Weekly from cover to cover sixteen hours a day. And that, surely, would completely defeat the object.

No, spend your ten million on something which at best will cause the average passerby to say "Wow, look, Mary, a really big boat!" on their way for an ice cream and then you'd have a spare thirty million to spend in more important things like beer and kebabs. Who knows, you might even find it in your heart to whizz a couple of quid over to your favourite charity while your outlandish ego would continue to be duly satisfied as people would still refer to you as 'Dave with the big boat' which is surely what you were after in the first place. Unless your name isn't Dave.

Anyway, you might be surprised to learn that I've never owned a yacht (mainly because I do, indeed, spend all my spare cash on beer and kebabs) but I presume they can only be a constant source of grief, requiring constant maintenance and random, unexpected payments. Lord knows, owning a car has enough associated niggles - insurance, tax, emissions thingies, MOTs, mothers-in-law telling you to slow down... but a yacht? My minds turns to fudge at the very thought.

Still, in the end, I suppose it's true what they say - whatever floats your boat.

"My style is a constant barrage of ideas that flow from me to the canvas"

Kelly Fischer Artist

TONY BRYANT
✉ tonysureng@gmail.com

The Tennessee-born artist expresses her observations and inspirations through lines and patches of colour on canvas

MALAGA. Tennessee-born artist Kelly Fischer will bring her latest works to the exhibition hall in Mijas from Sunday 5 to Friday 31 May.

The centrepiece of the show, titled Street Art Solo Exhibition, will be St Bernard Pass II, a vibrant multi-coloured canvas inspired by Fischer's recent trip between Switzerland and Italy on the St Bernard Pass. Through lines and patches of colour on canvas, Fischer expresses her observations and inspirations. Upon close inspection, the viewer will notice people and buildings amid the semi-abstract markings - a consistent theme throughout Fischer's 'Street Art' series.

Now based in Switzerland, the artist spends equal time at her studios in Bern and Memphis, and she maintains strong connections with both countries. Her paintings have been featured at numerous galleries and exhibitions, including Art Basel Miami Beach, the Austrian Biennale, and the Venice Biennale.

Aside from art, Kelly has published 11 children's books and is the former founder and head of the English Montessori School of Bern.

SUR in English caught up with the artist shortly before she arrived on the coast and she explained that her art is a reflection of her personality.

painters?

-Manfred Kuhnert, who is originally from East Germany but has resided in California for over 40 years, has had a tremendous influence on me. His choice of color and line is so intriguing. We became friends on one of my many trips to Laguna Beach, California. I own several of his paintings and can stare at them at length.

-How did you develop your style?

-My style is constantly evolving. It is a reflection of my personality and the constant barrage of ideas that flow from me to the canvas. To me painting starts out like a difficult puzzle that is scattered and needs to be put back together piece by piece. Organized chaos.

-You say, "My semi-abstract portraits tell a story of whimsical spontaneity." Can you explain what this means?

-Whimsical spontaneity means that my paintings are fluid and unpredictable. They are not forced or planned in advance.

-Why did you decide to settle in Switzerland?

-At 22 years of age I moved to Switzerland to study. Little did I know I would meet my wonderful husband, Robert, on my second day in Switzerland. After my studies finished, we moved to Paris, France to study French. Shortly after, we married and returned to Switzerland for my husband's work.

-Have you exhibited in Spain before?

-No, but I have signed a two-year contract with VESANIART to exhibit with them exclusively in Spain.

-You have exhibited in many cities around the world; which has been the most memorable?

-I am always honored and excited to exhibit my artwork in any city but the city that stands out the most is Miami! The energy and enthusiasm are not things I have ever felt or experienced in another city.

-You spend equal time in your studios in Bern and Memphis; does this have a reflection on your work?

-Yes, absolutely! My artwork painted in Memphis is more vibrant and looser. My artwork painted in Bern is more structured and geometrical. The color palette I choose is also more limited in Bern. The vast differences I experience in each city from light to the energy of the people helps me to balance my artwork. I need both cities to produce balanced artwork.

-Why did you embark on a trip to St Bernard Pass?

-It's on the way to the south of France where I spend a lot of time.

-How did this inspire your art?

-Travelling over the Pass has influenced my work in a tremendous way. The colors, shapes and overall feeling while travelling in this area simply were mesmerizing to my senses.

-You spend a lot of time in Eze Plage, France; what is the attraction to this location?

-At first, I simply vacationed in this area. Eventually, I received a project to paint 14 paintings for two villas in Eze Plage; Villa Paradise and Villa Panorama. The owner absolutely wanted the artwork to blend with the Mediterranean Sea and nature, and I needed to spend time there to capture the essence of the nature.

-What do you consider to be the highlight of your career so far?

-I consider every inch that I move forward a highlight. But one highlight that stands out in particular is my upcoming solo exhibition at the Swiss Consulate in New York City. After living in Switzerland for more than thirty years, to be recognized as a Swiss meant the world to me.

-What inspired you to write children's books?

-I founded and directed The English Montessori School of Bern for 18 years. While teaching, I realized that I was a natural at storytelling. I started writing stories to help the international children that I was teaching try to understand the importance of kindness and acceptance. This was not an easy task, but I did manage to publish 12 books.

Roman Oasis restaurant to close after 36 years

One of the Costa del Sol's most iconic restaurants, run by flamboyant Englishman Paul Hickling, will not reopen for the summer

✉ ashbolton@hotmail.com

SABINILLAS. Popular expat restaurant, The Roman Oasis, will not be reopening for business this summer, it has been announced.

The eatery, opened by flamboyant Englishman Paul Hickling over 36 years ago close to the Roman baths in Sabinillas, had in recent years only opened during July and August and was due to open again this summer.

But announcing the closure on Facebook last Tuesday, Paul, who first moved to Marbella in 1978, said: "After much soul searching and the fact that next week I'm going to be 74, I'm happy to say that I've suddenly made the decision to retire and close The Roman Oasis after 36 amazing years.

"It's been on my mind for the last few years and I've always justified re-opening but time passes rapidly and it's time to smell the roses.

"It is very fitting to close now and not do a 'last season' with all which it entails and it's nice to finish when the business was still packing them in."

He concluded his message by saying: "I know this may disappoint some of you and I would like to thank the thousands and thousands of people who walked through the gates and I hope I gave you a good time. You certainly gave me one!"

Paul opened the restaurant in 1983 after visiting the Roman baths in Sabinillas with his best friend Alan.

It was a "complete disaster" at first, he said, and was losing money for the first few years. However, the restaurant went on to become an unbridled success and gave Paul so many amusing anecdotes that four years ago he wrote a book about the experience.

The book features the late English chef Keith Floyd, who became a good friend of Paul's after he bought a house in Manilva.

Paul said: "Keith was a friend of mine for 10 years, and in fact, he actually spent the last six weeks of his life here in my house, and then he went back to England and a month later he died.

"He finished his last book in my courtyard here. He was a great character, an incredible chef, but an absolute nightmare sometimes."

Paul, a father of three, now plans on "playing golf badly" and traveling more during his retirement.

He added: "I've had an absolute blast during these 36 amazing years. Not many restaurants have lasted that long on the coast."

Irish ambassador shows support for upcoming Darkness Into Light walk

MALAGA. The Darkness Into Light charity association welcomed Ireland's ambassador to Spain, Sile Maguire, from Madrid this week to support their cause ahead of the group's annual walk on Saturday, 11 May.

The Darkness Into Light walk in support of a suicide and self harm prevention charity Pieta House was first held in Dublin 11 years ago and represents the therapeutic counselling journey, highlighting the importance of mental health and wellbeing. Since then it has grown into a worldwide movement with 200,000 people all simultaneously joining the walk last year at 202 venues in 19 different countries.

In Spain, 230 participants joined the event in Estepona and another 80 in Alicante. This year the goal is to have 500 and 200, respectively, when it kicks off on 11 May at 5.30am. The walk in Estepona will start from in Calle Terral beside Bronzzzano Beach Club.

The entry fee (25 euros for adults) allows Pieta House and partners (in this case Afesol Salud Mental) to continue to deliver vital services.

Registration can be done online (www.darknessintolight.ie) or via email (costadelsol@darknessintolight.ie).

Death of guitar virtuoso Narciso Yepes

Yepes made his début in Madrid in December 1947 and the overwhelming success of this performance brought him much acclaim

The death of Narciso Yepes on 3 May 1997 marked the end of an era in the history of the Spanish guitar. Yepes was considered one of the finest virtuoso classical guitarists of the twentieth century, surpassed only by Andrés Segovia. He developed a strong interest in music from the Baroque period and showed an overwhelming preference for the compositions of Spanish composers like Joaquín Rodrigo. He was also instrumental in the rediscovery of many previously neglected Baroque compositions and achieved distinction as a composer, especially in the realm of film music.

Born in Lorca, Murcia, in November 1927, Yepes received his first guitar at the age of four and he soon showed a natural musical talent. His father arranged for the youngster to have lessons with the celebrated guitarist, Jesús Guevara, and he began playing the instrument with great proficiency. His family moved to Valencia when Yepes was nine years old and four years later, he was accepted to study at the Conservatorio de Valencia with the pianist and composer Vicente Asencio.

The young maestro made his début in Madrid in December 1947 and the overwhelming success of this performance brought him much acclaim from critics and the public alike. After his success in Madrid, Yepes began visiting Switzerland, Italy, Germany, and France. During this time he made two early recordings; one in mono with the Madrid Chamber Orchestra, and the second in stereo with the Spanish National Orchestra. He went on to make more than 50 recordings.

After performing in Paris in 1950, Yepes spent a year studying with Romanian violinist, George Enescu, and the acclaimed German pianist, Walter Gieseking. It was while in Paris that Yepes met a young Polish student called Maria Szumlakowska - the daughter of the Ambassador of Poland in Spain - and they married in 1958.

A benchmark in his career came in 1964, when, while performing with the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, Yepes unveiled his ten-string guitar, an instrument he had invented with renowned guitar maker José Ramírez III. After 1964, Yepes used the iconic ten-string guitar exclusively, touring all over the world performing solo recitals and concerts with the world's leading orchestras, giving an average of 130 performances each year.

He was granted many official honours during his long career and these included the Gold Medal for Distinction in Arts, presented by King Juan Carlos I; the Premio Nacional de Música and an Honorary Doctorate from the University of Murcia.

Yepes began to limit his public appearances after 1993 due to illness. He gave his last concert on 1 March 1996 in Santander and he died in Murcia in 1997, after a long battle with lymphoma.

PET CARE

Marching in line

Processionary caterpillars are back and can be very dangerous for your pet

They're back! You can't help being fascinated by them. But far from being innocent, they are very dangerous, especially to your pets.

Every year the processionary caterpillars make their appearance and take us by surprise, marching in line following one another. Their home is a fluffy candy floss ball in pine trees and they descend to march along the ground. I have seen a procession of caterpillars on a street in Fuengirola. There was no nest in sight.

If you find a nest in your garden I strongly suggest that you get it professionally destroyed by a registered pest destroyer. Don't attempt to do the job yourself. You shouldn't attempt to burn the nest either as even the fumes are dangerous.

Your pet will be intrigued by the line of caterpillars and sniff. A caterpillar will attach itself to the pet's nose and will cause a great deal of pain. Telephone your vet and say you have an emergency. Keep the victim wrapped in a towel, well away from your body.

A friend of mine found his cat a victim of a caterpillar just as he was about to leave for the airport en route for America. In the car the distressed cat snuggled up to him and as a result he had to postpone his trip for several days.

If you find a nest on public land, inform the town hall and they will deal with it.

If you have a final judgment awarding a compensatory pension, you will not lose it because your ex is granted an ecclesiastical declaration of nullity. You would lose it if you enter into a new marriage or a domestic partnership with someone else. There is a Supreme Court ruling which rejects the withdrawal of the pension, since the appellant accepted the validity of the decision granting the pension, which became final.

returned to the UK. What can I do to sort this out? Is it possible to divorce him without him being present? How much would the procedure cost me? My pension is 600 euros per month.

You can ask for a divorce even if you do not know where your husband is. To do this, you must file for divorce in the court where you live. The court will take the necessary steps to try to locate your husband in case he has another address in Spain, but if he is not found, the judge can decree the divorce, even if your husband does not appear. In relation to the expenses of the procedure and taking into account your income, it is possible that you are eligible for the free justice service, so you could ask the Bar Association that corresponds to your home, to assign you a lawyer and prosecutor ex officio, so you would not have to pay anything.

PRIVATE SALE

People who sell a valuable house should be able to choose to keep the process discrete and not giving away such personal and or valuable information possibly to people with the wrong intentions. For those reasons, we developed 2 extra options to sell:

1. Our Private Sale option. Here we only give basic information and 3 pictures of the exterior, just enough to get a good impression of the property. You will have less clients curiously looking at and around your house on the internet.

Nor will we show your property to any unknown clients. We will only invite clients into your house that have been carefully screened

2. Our Home docs option. Here we use a more common listing. However, details like floor plans etc. will be kept in a secure data room area.

These 2 are safe and better ways of selling your property. Selling a valuable house takes time and the right, discrete marketing through the right channels are needed. We will take care of that for you. Please contact us for further information.

GARDENING

Bessera elegans

Like a firework going off in your garden, these bright orange flowers shower down from the tips of the stems

Bessera elegans, commonly called Coral drops, has dainty fuchsia-like flowers in midsummer.

It is native to south western Mexico and to Texas and is usually classified in the Asparagaceae family, although there is some confusion as to which family it should belong and plant catalogues may list it in any one of a number of others. There is also a purple cultivar although there is also a question mark over whether it is the same family or something very similar.

It will withstand some drought, and dry soil is definitely preferable to wet as the corms of Bessera will rot easily when kept too damp. Each small corm will provide 8-10 wiry flower stems up to 70cm high; each with around eight showy blooms which are orange-red with a white or creamy-yellow stripe inside. The stamens and anther are blue and the pollen either green or teal, creating a stunning and unusual contrast of colours.

Bessera will grow in partial shade or full sun and it is best planted in a container so that it can be moved indoors in the winter. It looks great planted in groups in a border too, but the corms must be lifted as soon as the leaves have turned yellow and stored in a cool, dry place. It can be replanted in spring, using fresh compost if planting in a container. As soon as it is warm enough the thin, grass like leaves will appear followed by the flowering stems around three months later.

Once the green leaves have appeared, Bessera can be fed once a month with a liquid fertiliser. Once the leaves start to turn yellow and the plant has entered its dormant stage, stop watering. When all the foliage is dead the corms should be lifted and stored. After flowering is over fruit capsules appear containing small black seeds. The seeds can be sown but will take two to three years to flower. Propagation can also be carried out by splitting the corms up and replanting.

GLORIOUS HOLLYHOCKS

This picture of a beautiful group of pink hollyhocks was sent in by SUR in English reader, Annie Pennington.

Hollyhocks, or Alcea rosa to give them their botanical name, are found throughout the Mediterranean and extend as far as the Irano-turanian region (a floristic region that includes parts of Central Asia). The hybrid varieties of Alcea are grown in all the temperate areas of the world.

The Mediterranean wild species is extremely hardy, and quite difficult to eradicate as it has a long tap root making it drought tolerant. It hybridises very easily and will spread around the garden.

GARDENING IN MAY

Divide and transplant

Lifting and dividing spring bulbs needs to be done every couple of years or they may become overcrowded. You can often tell if overcrowding is taking place as the clump of daffodils, tulips etc will be flowering less and less each year. Use a large fork to lift the clump, being very careful not to spear the bulbs and definitely don't try hauling them out by the foliage. Bulbs tend to 'settle' into the ground over time so they may be a lot deeper than you think. When you've got the clump up, shake off some of the earth so you can see what you've got and then gently prise small offsets away from their parents. The larger the offsets are, the sooner they'll flower. Sort through the clump and discard any soft, shrivelled or unhealthy looking bulbs. You should replant the bulbs straight away; the offsets can be planted in a 'holding' bed if you like and transferred to their final positions in a couple of years.

traditional gastronomy of the area.

The festival starts at 10am on Sunday 5 May with the traditional romería (pilgrimage) to the shrine of the saint. Dozens of gaily-decorated carriages, followed by hundreds of pilgrims, will participate in the event, which will include the presentation of the 'Churrianero' of the year award.

A mass will be held in the San Antonio Abad Church at 8pm on Wednesday 15 May: this will be followed by a performance of the choir of the brotherhood of San Isidro Labrador.

The celebrations will come to a climax on Sunday 12 May at 7pm, when the coveted image of the saint embarks on a procession through the streets of Churriana.

San Isidro was a Spanish farmworker known for his piety towards the poor and animals. He is also the patron saint of Madrid and legend claims that he was often seen ploughing with two angels at his side.

Macael's historic marble industry

ALMELLONES

2 days in Macael Car and Walk.

Travel time: 3 hours and 15 minutes from Malaga.
Historical entertainment: 4 hours.
Visit the monuments and museums: 6 hours.

Dating back more than 2,500 years, the marble industry of Macael is one of the biggest in the history of Europe. For two millennia, this Almería town, located in the Almanzora valley, has been associated with marble. Macael marble is the building blocks of lots of famous and historical architecture throughout the country. For example, The Roman Theatre of Mérida, the palatial city of Medina Azahara in Cordoba, the Alhambra in Granada and the Monument of the Constitution of 1978 in Madrid are all made from Macael marble.

Macael is very proud of its major export; so much so that for the past three years they have celebrated it with a thematic party, that explores its rich history. This year, the party is taking place this weekend, and this Almería municipality will be filled with all things marble.

Those who visit Macael this weekend will be able to see stonemasons, muleteers, people driving carts and washer women to name just a few. All of them will be dressed in traditional costumes from the first half of the last century when 'The Battle of the Quarries', the struggle of the locals to keep the exploitation of the mines public and out of the hands of the caciques, took place. This weekend there will be a reenactment.

Throughout the weekend, stonework demonstrations will take place, showing how sculptures are made. Ox carts will also be used to show visitors how the marble was transported decades ago. Music from the first half of the 20th century, including swing and the paso doble will be played, giving the occasion a traditional and lighthearted feel.

Traditional dishes, such as tapas, will be served, alongside barrels of wine of the sort drank during the first celebration back in 1947.

Ask any wine lover about the most important events in the history of wine, and it is surprising how the same subjects crop up frequently. On a scale of 1 to 10, and starting with the invention of glass bottles and cork stoppers, this must make 10/10.

The traditional ageing of wine in oak casks? In laboratory tests it has been shown that wine is no worse off for never seeing an oak stave, and clay jars work just as well. If a wood taste is required, chuck in some wood chips. 6/10.

What about the numerous official bodies that enforce rules and regulations on how wine is produced the Consejos Reguladores or Regulatory Boards? It has never been shown that wine produced in countries where there are no regulatory controls is any better or any worse than wine from countries where such organisations are unknown. 3/10.

Does the practice of rating wines by points help or hinder? People love it or hate it. Not all blame can be laid at Robert Parker's (RIP professionally) door, but it is indisputable that the winemaker is at the mercy of the personal taste of the classifier, regardless of how that wine may be considered by the drinking public at large. 5/10.

ANDREW J. LINN

At the now legendary Judgement of Paris wine event (1976) French experts tasted a selection of Californian and French wines blind. When the labels were unveiled and much to their embarrassment, it became obvious they considered the American upstarts to be better than their own national products. This was the beginning of the end of French domination over all other countries' wines. 8/10.

The downside was that it opened a Pandora's box for the wine forger, who, as a consequence had a much greater potential fake wine portfolio to exploit. 0/10.

Another blind tasting, this time pitching the USA against China, took place at last month's ProWein event. On this occasion top US and Aussie wines were relegated to a lower rung than a Chinese product. A panel of Masters of Wine gave Noble Dragon ( ) a higher rating than Penfolds, Mondavi, Jacobs Creek and a few other top names. 0/10.

WINE OF THE WEEK

Artuke Pies Negros 2016

This wine is quite a find (although El Corte Inglés stocks it) and will not be on most wine buffs' radar. A Rioja made by a small family bodega using Tempranillo and Garnacha, with a higher than usual alcohol content of 14°.

The grapes are hand-picked and pressed manually (by foot, or should that be by feet?). Aged for at least 12 months in oak. Around 10 euros.

Why don't we eat insects?

We're still looking for new sources of nutrients and in just a few years have incorporated more new foods into our diet than we have over the last five centuries

ESPERANZA PELÁEZ

MALAGA. We live our lives continually worried about the depletion of our natural resources. Our search for new sources of nutrients has, in just a few years, seen more new foods incorporated into our diets than in the last five centuries. We now eat flowers, fruit, leaves, seeds and exotic roots and even, on occasion, plankton.

We unknowingly eat fillets of foreign species of fish which are disguised with commercial names to induce confidence. However, there are some things that we would find difficult to eat, such as insects, no matter how much time has been invested in studies and campaigns to convince us that they are the most viable source of protein for the not too distant future.

There is a reason for this, which anthropologists Lorenzo Mariano Juárez and Julián López García explain very well in an article published in the Colección E-Books ICAF (International Commission on Food Anthropology), and it is none other than food culture.

No longer human

They argue that "even in situations of extreme hunger, humans will not eat just anything to fill their stomachs", and add that "forcing people to eat something unpleasant [...] can satisfy their hunger, but it can also lead to the annulment of the definition of being human".

In other words, we are defined by what we eat, but we are also defined by the extent of what we refuse to eat, including things that are appreciated as a delicacy in other cultures.

The horse meat scandal

We found it scandalous that we were being given horse meat in certain meat products, and there

Insects are the most viable source of protein for the not too distant future. :: SUR

Regardless of how much time is spent on studies and campaigns, there are some things we just won't eat are people from other cultures (and religions) who would prefer not to eat at all rather than let pork or beef pass their lips.

In Spanish, the popular insult "que te den morcilla" (I hope they give you black pudding) comes from a time when consuming the blood of an animal was considered disgusting. Now black pudding is found on most restaurants' menus throughout the country.

This goes to show that we will eat everything, within reason, and there are foods that we have a hard time getting used to, no matter how healthy and nutritious they tell us they are. But we get there.

The long history of 'butter' in Spain

Until not long ago, the term 'butter' was used to describe something which very different to what we use nowadays

:: ANA VEGA PÉREZ DE ARLUCEA

MÁLAGA. These days we drink milk every day, spread butter on our toast and there is even controversy about whether or not we should. In the past, though, dairy products were considered a delicacy. That is where phrases such as 'crème de la crème' come from, to reflect people's social status.

For centuries and in most regions of Spain, apart from the fertile lands of the north, cream and what we now call butter were luxury items because there was little pastureland, a lack of transportation and no refrigeration facilities. That is why Spanish gastronomy has traditionally been based on olive oil and, to a lesser extent, pork fat; they simply did not have the ability to use anything else, unlike other countries in Europe.

We are talking about cows' milk, of course, and butter can only be produced from vaccinated animals, so until Friesian cows were introduced in Spain, less milk was produced and even then only at certain times of year. The native cows were bred to work in fields or for meat and leather, so milk was something only drunk by farmers' families and, if there was an abundance, they would produce small quantities of cheese and other derivatives. Because of the amount of land needed for cows, goats and sheep were always more popular on the Spanish mainland and their milk was also considered healthier and tastier. With a higher fat content it was perfect to make what was then called 'manteca de ganado', or lard, but was actually butter.

A still life by Floris van Schooten with a dish of 'lard'. :: R. C.

In modern Spanish, 'manteca' is lard and 'mantequilla' is butter, but we now know not only that they are two very different things, but that the versions used then were completely unlike the ones we have today. When we use the word lard we are referring to pig fat, but in the past the word was used to describe fat from all types of animal, including sheep, goats or cows. So what we know as butter today used to be called lard, and the word butter was first used to describe cream, cream cheese or even pomade, until in 1734 the Royal Academy officially defined it as "a paste made with fat from a cow, beaten smooth, with sugar".

The meaning of words changes over time and it is sometimes difficult to follow. That is why if we search for butter in Spanish recipes, it would seem that whole milk was not used until almost the 19th century, when the terms 'manteca de ganado' or 'manteca de vacas' came into common use.

We should bear in mind that the vast majority of old cookery books which still exist do not really reflect popular dishes. They were designed for privileged people, so it is not surprising that they would include such an unusual item as butter.

The 'illa' part of the word 'mantequilla' (meaning butter) differentiated the type which was mixed with sugar and other ingredients from the normal version.

A type made from goat's milk was regularly consumed in Al-Ándalus during Moorish times: fresh, salted or cooked to remove the solids and impurities, extracted by the same Berber method used until not long ago in the Canary Islands to separate the fat from the liquid. In fact, the Canarians still refer to cooked butter or ghee with medicinal purposes as 'manteca de ganado'.

In Aragón butter was already being made with sheep's milk in the 14th century, according to a document dating back to 1335 from the Pilar archive, and it refers to priests eating eggs fried in sheep fat. In 1798 there was also reported to be a "very delicate but not abundant" production in the villages of Escartin, Basarán and Cortillas, in Huesca.

Are you wishing you could try some of these ingredients now? They were used to make cakes and pastries, according to the 'Libro del Arte de Cocina' cookery book (1607), written by Domingo Hernández de Maceras en Salamanca, while 'Regalo de la vida humana', written by Juan Vallés, from Navarra, explained the method used to obtain sheep fat in the 16th century, and a hundred years later royal chef Francisco Martínez Motiño (as well as giving several recipes using 'manteca de vacas'), explained how to remove the fatty part of goats' milk and then make buttery sweets and cakes.

The history of butter and other fats in Spain is quite a long one, and there is no space to continue it here, but don't worry: part two will be coming up in the near future.

Cancer association installs the third local 'bell of dreams' in the Hospital Quirón in Malaga

There are already two bells in the province, one in the Hospital Costa del Sol Marbella and the other in the Hospital Universitario Virgen de la Victoria

■ SUR IN ENGLISH

MALAGA. The aim of the initiative is to strengthen the ties between cancer patients and health-care personnel. The bell is there for patients to ring when they have finished their treatment or have received good news, to express their joy and as a symbol of triumph at the end of a hard and difficult stage of treatment.

The Spanish cancer association, the AECC, wants the sound of the 'Bell of Dreams' (Campana de los Sueños) to remain with patients as an exciting memory and become an objective to achieve that transmits hope and support to everyone who is fighting cancer.

The AECC installed the newest bell at the pre-launch of the new oncology floor at the Hospital Quirón in Malaga recently.

The presentation was attended by Francisco Aguilar, provincial president of AECC Málaga, accompanied by Pedro González, manager of the Junta Provincial of AECC Málaga, Rosa Villena, president of the Comité de Acción Social of AECC Málaga and Paloma Gómez, vicepresident of AECC Fuengirola.

The initiative, to install a bell for patients to ring, was the wish of Miriam Segura Navarro, who had seen the system in Toronto, where she had received treatment and where it was called 'The Bravery Bell'. She returned to Marbella to continue her treatment with her family and expressed a desire that the hospital also had a bell like the one in Canada.

Unfortunately Miriam died last year but her mother, Concha Navarro, became a key figure in the project and was also at the ceremony to install this bell in Hospital Quirón.

The first 'bell of dreams' was installed in the Hospital Costa del Sol Marbella (where Miriam was treated) in December last year, and the second in the Hospital Universitario Virgen de la Victoria just before Easter.

AECC reaches agreement to distribute 'knitted knockers' among cancer patients

■ SUR IN ENGLISH

MALAGA. The president of the provincial board of the AECC (Spanish Association Against Cancer) in Malaga, Francisco Aguilar Muñoz, and the president of the Knitted Knockers Costa del Sol association, Maria Bailey, met recently to sign an agreement to promote the prevention and early detection of breast cancer, but also to improve the quality of life of patients and their families as well as distributing free, knitted prosthesis to women who have undergone a mastectomy.

Initially the project began with Maria Bailey, coordinator of the Knitted Knockers group, who offered it to the Pink Ladies group of the AECC - volunteers of various nationalities who work together in Fuengirola - with the aim of providing women who had undergone a mastectomy with free knitted, breast prostheses.

Later it was the provincial board of the AECC Malaga which decided to extend it to the rest of AECC's local headquarters so that the initiative reaches all the women who need it.

According to data from the AECC Observatorio del Cáncer, this type of tumour is most common among Western women.

Western women

Each year 32,825 cases are diagnosed in Spain. Andalucía with 5,572 cases is the community with the highest incidence of breast cancer and Malaga with 1,098 diagnoses, the sixth highest province in Spain.

OSTEOPOROSIS, A SILENT DANGER FOR YOUR BONE STRUCTURE

BENALMADENA

Osteoporosis literally means 'porous bones'. Our bones are made up of a thick outer shell and a strong inner honeycomb mesh of tiny struts of bone. Osteoporosis means some of these struts become thin or break. This makes the bone more fragile and prone to break, especially the ones which consist mainly of soft bone anyway. It is often only detected either by 'accident', when your orthopaedic surgeon does an x-ray of your back because of lower back pain, or when you break a bone after a rather minor incident. The most common fractures due to osteoporosis are the wrist and the femoral neck.

Two types of cells are constantly at work in our bones: one set builds up new bone while another set break down old bone. From our 40s onwards, the demolition cells overtake and our bones gradually lose their density as a natural part of ageing.

One in two women and one in five men over the age of 50 in the UK will break a bone, mainly because of osteoporosis. Exactly why this happens is still not fully understood.

Our bone health is largely down to the genes we inherit from our parents. But there are other common risk factors like women with early menopause or hysterectomy (before the age of 45), taking corticosteroid tablets, medical conditions which affect the absorption of foods, such as Crohn's disease, coeliac condition or ulcerative colitis, women with an eating disorder.

Other well-known risks are long term immobility, smoking, drinking excessive amount of alcohol and kidney diseases.

One in two women and one in five men over the age of 50 in the UK will break a bone, mainly because of osteoporosis

It is nowadays recommended that every woman over 60 should have her bone density measured at least once every 5 years. The most accurate way of measuring the bone density is done by special X-ray of the lumbar spine and hip and comparing those results with the average of a 35 year old person. It can also be done by a specific ultrasound scan of the heel bone, available at Clinica SANDALF.

Depending on the outcome of this test you might not need any treatment at all (normal results), you might need Calcium and Vitamin D substitution and weight bearing exercises (mild osteoporosis), or you might even need some special medication to help restoring the bone mass again (advanced osteoporosis). Further bone density measurements might be needed to monitor the effect of the treatment.

New book reveals life-changing advice about mental health issues

TONY BRYANT

✉ tonysureng@gmail.com

None of the author's friends or family were aware of his mental health issues because he hid them behind a clown's smile

MALAGA. After 15 recovery years, local writer David Hurst suffered a summer of extreme emotional and mental torment when he had tried to do things his own way again for a few months.

The 52-year-old freelance journalist from Torre del Mar had stopped drinking heavily with the support of others through self-help groups. But two years ago, even though he was not drinking or using any mind-altering substances, he began to feel continually anxious and depressed. Not knowing which way to turn, he found himself literally on his knees in his lounge in floods of tears. None of David's close friends or family were aware of this, because he hid his problems behind a clown's smile, but, as the writer explains to SUR in English, "for every waking second it felt as if I was walking through the thickest toxic treacle".

David, who has two young sons, returned to the self-help group, although it was not a choice he recalls making. "Within 24 hours, I ended up back at the self-help group. I still don't know how I ended up there; it wasn't a decision I remember making at all," David says.

Life-changing encounter

However, David's situation would change drastically after a chance meeting with psychotherapist Wayne Kemp. He met Kemp after a therapy session when he went for a coffee with some of the members of the group. They got chatting and David told Kemp about ending up on his knees crying out for help. He explained that he felt as if he was trying to "climb a vertical cliff face made of jagged glass".

The psychotherapist explained that he had been where David was and he knew not only a way out, but a manner of living that would change his life – to ensure the best years of his life were ahead.

"Immediately upon taking Wayne's suggestions into my own life I saw my own astounding transformation. I felt the most relaxed and happiest I'd ever been. He told me that mental health problems get progressively worse, but that recovery from them, if done correctly, can mean that life gets progressively better," David declares.

Kemp is a leading psychotherapist with 30 years of experience in successfully treating thousands of clients around the world and spends half the year in Malaga. He has helped people suffering from every known mental health illness, including severe stress, anxiety, alcoholism, drug addiction, gambling addiction, bipolar, schizophrenia and depression.

Over the next year, in a series of sessions with Kemp, David heard so much that made sense. He felt the most relaxed and happiest he had ever been, a state of being that continues to grow. As a writer, he knew he had to share this.

"Wayne explained that he had been precisely where I was – by the end of his drinking he had been finishing two bottles of vodka a day. Also addicted to strong prescription drugs, he spent his days out of his head, spitting and cursing at the television, and too anxious and depressed to leave the house. I totally related to him in a way that was quite remarkable. As he spoke, he looked directly into my eyes and it was as if he was telling me my own story," the writer explains.

After speaking with Kemp and seeing the increasing popularity of self-help and mental-health books, David knew Kemp's experience, methods and message had to be shared. He was seeing a growing number of people struggling with various mental health issues, such as addiction, depression and anxiety, but he realised that a vast number of the books being read by these people concentrated merely on coping or surviving with their mental health issues, but none offered any real solution.

"Every time I came away from chatting with Wayne I'd be thinking, 'Wow! This really needs to be out there to help others who are struggling'. His knowledge and methods for living I could see helping those suffering from all manner of mental health problems. Even for people not suffering, it was a great way to live that could only enhance life," he points out.

David has recently published a new book (co-written with Kemp) called The Anxiety Conversation, which is based on a series of interviews conducted in Andalucía during the course of one year. David asked Kemp more than 500 questions concerning all aspects of mental health and he found the psychotherapist's answers life-changing.

Kemp claims that mental illness is really a message for people to make changes, and that the emotional pain and the problems it brings are delivering a clear communication. He believes ignoring this or masking it with drugs – prescribed or illegal – can have disastrous results.

The Anxiety Conversation aims to show not how to survive a mental illness, but how to overcome and thrive from it, 'to become the person you are meant to be'.

David is convinced that Kemp's advice offers a life-changing source of wisdom, even though some of his methods are at odds with the accepted way of thinking. He hopes the new book will show people who suffer from mental health issues that when they feel pain, whether physical or emotional, it is a message for them to change - to stop doing something or to do something differently.

"We did the interviews and wrote the book mostly in Andalucía. I have no doubt that Wayne Kemp will very soon become an internationally known name. His knowledge is second to none and, as with many pioneers, some of his views go against current accepted thinking, but make perfect sense when explained, and I am sure they will become accepted wisdom," David concludes.

GPs test a scheme to spend more time with each patient

The measure is being implemented in the Vélez Sur, Algarrobo, Antequera, Antequera-Estación and La Lobilla health centres

ÁNGEL ESCALERA

GPs in health centres in La Axarquía, Antequera and the Costa del Sol are testing a new scheme from the regional government's ministry of Health this week that means that they are able to spend more time with each patient. The aim is to restructure the doctors' working day and improve the service in general.

Doctors at the Vélez Sur, Algarrobo, Antequera, Antequera-Estación and La Lobilla health centres have been told they can now spend at least seven minutes with each patient, half an hour a day on telemedicine, 15 minutes for programmed and complicated patients and also make time for research and training.

Under the new plan, GPs will see a maximum of 30 patients with pre-booked appointments a day, which in some cases is about half the present number.

The Junta de Andalucía's Minister for Health and Families, Jesús Aguirre, says this is in response to doctors' wishes, as they want to be able to dedicate more time to patient consultations, and it will also mean they can include training as part of their normal working day because some administrative tasks such as issuing certificates will now be handled by other staff.

The regional government's Health representative in Malaga province, Carlos Bautista, says that health centres cover 80 per cent of patients' needs, and that this reorganisation "is absolutely vital because it will relieve the existing pressure on hospital emergency departments".

Other improvements are also to be put in place, and Bautista says that additional staff are to be employed in health centres.

In terms of the Junta's budget for running health centres in the region, he says the aim is for this to be increased to 20 per cent of the total spending on health, which is four percent higher than at present.

A boy with leukemia has been cured by a new genetic treatment

CAR-T 19, which is only used in three hospitals, helps the immune system to recognise and destroy cancer cells

:: SUR

BARCELONA. A six-year-old boy called Álvaro, from Alicante, who had type B acute lymphoblastic leukemia and was not responding to conventional treatment, has been cured and able to live a normal life thanks to a new genetic therapy called CAR-T 19, paid for by the public health service. Álvaro was treated at the Hospital Sant Joan de Déu (HSJD) in Esplugues de Llobregat (Barcelona), one of only three children's hospitals in Spain authorised to provide the CAR-T treatment. The others are the Vall d'Hebron hospital, also in Barcelona, and the Niño Jesús hospital in Madrid.

Álvaro is now back at home, after doctors told him he could "go back to living a full and normal

Doctor Pons, in the centre, at the press conference. :: EFE life, and to enjoy it", said his mother Marina at the press conference. Also present were Dr Miquel Pons, the hospital's medical director, and Dr Susana Rives, the haematologist who has been treating the little boy. They explained the way the treatment had been used. Álvaro was diagnosed with acute lymphoblastic leukemia when he was very young, and after the usual treatment and a bone marrow transplant, the illness returned and he was referred to the Sant Joan de Déu hospital for CAR-T 19 treatment last autumn. Although he suffered complications and spent time in intensive care, Álvaro recovered and is now living normally with his parents and younger sister.

CAR-T 19 is a therapy which helps the patient's immune system to recognise, attack and destroy cancer cells in a guided manner. It consists of extracting blood from the patient by apheresis, a technique which enables the components of the blood to be separated in order to obtain T lymphocytes, a type of cell from the immune system. The T lymphocytes extracted from the patient are modified by genetic engineering techniques in the laboratory so they express the CAR-T receptor on the surface; this has the ability to recognise the tumoural CD19 antigen and destroy the cancerous cells.

Once modified genetically, through a process which can take from two to four weeks, the lymphocytes are transferred once again to the patient, who is able to lead a normal life after about three months.

Álvaro's is the first paediatric case of this type to have been financed under the public health system and it cost about 320,000 euros, explained Dr Pons, who also said that the HSJD has been carrying out this type of therapy since 2016.

In fact, Sant Joan de Déu was the only Spanish hospital to take part in the clinical tests which the multinational pharmaceutical company Novartis carried out around the world on CAR-T 19, with 16 paediatric patients. Of those patients, 80 per cent responded positively to the treatment.

MARBELLA. It was a good day for Germany on Saturday and triathletes Andreas Dreitz (3h 56:48) and Laura Philipp (4h 28:56) completed a double in the top positions in the Ironman 70.3 in Marbella.

British athlete Alistair Brownlee came second with a time of 4h 01:00, just ahead of Domenico Passuello in the men's category, while Nina Derron and Marta Bernardi completed the podium among the women.

Both the 2,300 participants and the around 10,000 spectators around Puerto Banús helped to demonstrate the pull of this event, each year growing on the world stage.

According to town hall estimations, hosting the event brought in around nine million euros to the town, with 75 per cent of those in attendance coming from abroad.

New optimism, same result

A record crowd at La Rosaleda on Saturday witnessed the first defeat of the Víctor Sánchez era

Malaga's hopes of automatic promotion were extinguished with a late 1-0 defeat at the hands of direct rivals Mallorca

MALAGA. The bubble has burst. Last week's 4-1 win in Alcorcón proved to be a false dawn as Malaga reverted to type on Saturday and suffered yet another late loss at La Rosaleda, this time to direct rivals for promotion, Mallorca.

A season-high 23,621 spectators were in attendance, and although the result went according to the form book, the quality of football on show was notably higher, especially in the first half as both sides created a number of chances.

Víctor Sánchez, sat on the home bench for the first time, had instructed his players to attack and they should have been awarded an early penalty when Javi Ontiveros took a tumble in the area under the clumsy challenge of Fran

Gámez. At the other end, Munir was fortunate to deflect Ante Budimir's close-range effort over the bar with the ball striking him on the thigh and squirming centimetres over the frame of the goal. There was nothing fortunate about his next intervention as he athletically tipped Dani Rodríguez's shot from the edge of the area around the post.

However, Malaga continued to pile on the pressure and both Adrián and Gustavo Blanco Leschuk both just missed the target with their efforts from outside the area.

In the second half, it was Malaga on the

Up next

CADIZ (A)

There is no let-up for Malaga. Up next is a trip to another direct rival for promotion, Cadiz.

Monday's clash (kick-off 9pm) will be the last of the match day and with Deportivo La Coruña just a point behind as it stands, it could mean that only a win will keep Malaga in the playoff places with just five games remaining.

Captain Federico Ricca is a doubt after being replaced with a knock in the 57th minute on Saturday while Dani Pacheco and Mamadou Koné are also battling to be fit for the clash.

Standing in Malaga's way is a team unbeaten in their last seven games. That run is even longer at the Ramón de Carranza - Cadiz have only lost once at home all season (0-2 to Alcorcón on 23 September 2018).

Darwin Machís will be the man to look out for; he has scored eight goals since his January move from Udinese.

tip over the bar.

However, after the all-action first half, things started to die down in the second as the tension of the occasion started to creep in. But it was a usual handicap of Malaga which showed its face again when, as stoppage time approached, Leo Suárez swept home Abdón Prats' low cross from the left to gift Mallorca a precious three points in the race for promotion.

This leaves Malaga in the final playoff spot with Deportivo La Coruña breathing down their neck, just a point behind, but coach Victor Sánchez was still able to see the positives: "We played most of the game in their half but football is all about taking your chances. Last week we did that but this time we weren't clinical enough. They [Mallorca] had two [sic] attempts on goal and scored one."

Agonising final day awaits for Femenino

Malaga's women's side picked up a precious point but results elsewhere mean only a win will do on the final match day

:: MARINA RIVAS / OPTA

MALAGA. It is going to go down to the wire for Malaga Femenino, who must win and hope their rivals fail to do so on what will be a nerve-wracking season finale for the Liga Iberdrola.

This comes despite Antonio Contreras' side picking up an unexpected away draw against heavily-fancied Athletic on Saturday. Malaga went some way towards avenging the 9-0 defeat suffered eight years previously, keeping the Basques at bay throughout a first half in which the visitors looked most likely to score.

Athletic struggled to get out of their half and Ainhoa was by far and away the busier of the two keepers. However, as has been the case for much of the season, Malaga failed to convert chances into goals and in the second half, the side from Bilbao could have taken the lead themselves, but for a phenomenal save from Chelsea to thwart Nekane.

Despite the point, however, results elsewhere went against Contreras' side and they go into the final day bottom of the table but still within touching distance of salvation.

Malaga CF has a debt of over 24 million euros, down around ten million on a year ago

:: ANTONIO GÓNGORA

MALAGA. Malaga CF approved its accounts for the previous year this week, some four months late and despite the opposition of some smaller shareholders. They were questioning a personal loan in the accounts to the owner and his family and asking for a reduction in boardroom pay.

One piece of data that didn't control, even though the club is in Segunda at the moment and therefore losing out on valuable television revenue.

Had the debt been 24 million euros in Primera, the effect on the accounts would have been negligible.

2018 generated a 12 million surplus, helped by 53.5 million for the club's image rights and sales of high-value players, Ignacio Camacho, Pablo Fornals and Sandro. The club has reduced its budget by half now it is in Segunda, expecting to spend around 37 million euros this year at the season start, but if promotion isn't won, the budget will fall to 20 million next year.

Unstoppable

Lionel Messi has done it again; he was the difference between two otherwise very evenly-matched sides in Wednesday's Champions League semi-final first leg against Liverpool

Occasionally when I was commenting on a Lionel Messi wonder-goal I'd be concerned that I'd gone over the top with the hyperbole.

"The best there is, the best there has ever been and the best there will ever be..." was how I verbosely summed up one particularly momentous moment.

Once I turned to Gerry Armstrong, a former team mate and great friend of the legendary George Best to ask: "Is he better now than Best, Pelé, Diego Maradona and Johan Cruyff?" Thankfully the big Northern Irishman confirmed that the Argentinian had surpassed the standards of the best there had previously been.

Normally Messi breezes through a game, picking and choosing his moments to ignite the occasion with his brilliance.

At the end of the semi-final with Liverpool he sunk into the turf of the Camp Nou, exhausted. Liverpool were unfortunate to face the unadulterated, completely committed version of the world's greatest ever footballer.

I saw runners at last weekend's London Marathon who had more left in the tank at the finishing line than Lionel Messi.

Jürgen Klopp commented after the game: "I couldn't be more proud." This seemed odd given the 3-0 scoreline yet it was one of his team's best performances under his leadership. "I was completely happy. It was the best away game in the Champions League so far this season and last season."

The Liverpool players gave their all. Sadio Mané and Roberto Firmino both had scoreable chances. Andrew Robertson elevated his game to another level. Mohamed Salah was prominent and at one point almost matched Messi, trick for trick.

The margin was so very fine. One slip in concentration let Luis Suárez score. His celebration suggests he won't be heading back to Merseyside to round off his career...

With fifteen minutes remaining Messi struck. The first was instinct or magnetoreception. The dictionary definition is: "A sense which allows an organism to detect a magnetic field to perceive direction, altitude or location."

There isn't a dictionary definition to describe the second goal. The 42nd freekick of his Barcelona career, his 600th goal was so precise we should be enlisting NASA scientists to study the flight. It wasn't millimetres, it was a nanometre! Klopp wasn't deflecting blame when he described Messi as "unstoppable".

For 83 minutes they had contained him but two goals in a seven-minute spell was the defining difference between two almost perfectly-matched teams.

It's difficult to describe the genius in words so maybe we should use figures. He's now reached the insurmountable 600 goals in his club career, that's an average of 42 goals per season. Some would say 42 goals is a freak occurrence; he is a persistent freak.

Once it was suggested that he couldn't pull it off in the Premier League? Ahem! It's now 26 goals in 33 games against English teams who must be the cream of the country as they play in the Champions League.

The only man who can stop him at Anfield next week is the chap at passport control at John Lennon Airport!

Half-hour splurge sends Marbella on the way to resounding win

Goals from Juanma, Paulo Vitor and Lolo Pavón rounded off a superb first-half for the hosts, unbeaten in 16

MARBELLA 4 DON BENITO 0

:: JULIO RODRÍGUEZ

MARBELLA. The league is ending much too soon for Marbella whose unbeaten run extended to 16 games with a resounding 4-0 victory at home to Don Benito on Saturday. This was the side's biggest win of the season and came as a result of an astonishing opening 30 minutes in which the hosts blew their opponents away.

After chances were spurned by Juanma and Paulo Vitor, the opener arrived in the 13th minute when Juanma beat his man to nod home Samu Delgado's cross.

Paulo Vitor then bagged his first in a Marbella shirt when he fired into the bottom corner from just outside the area after finding himself in acres of space on his favoured right foot.

The Brazilian then could have doubled his tally but for a fine save from Néstor Díaz to tip over the bar.

Defender Lolo Pavón then made it three with just half an hour on the clock, volleying home Samu de los Reyes' flat corner.

Despite changes from Don Benito boss, Juan Antonio García, very little changed in terms of the direction of the tie, though the hosts did ease off the gas.

The final goal came with 25 minutes left to play courtesy of Samu Delgado who made sure that the cross didn't go to waste, tapping home from a narrow angle at the far post.

Marbella sit in eighth place with the playoffs, mathematically at least, still within reach.

THE STARS

Aquarius
January 21 - February 19
Seek out your energy stores this week. A clean, fresh diet and light-hearted chat should get you going. Socially you could be much in demand.

Pisces
February 20th - March 20th
The chances are that you have been run ragged of late. What with home commitments and your social life, do you have any energy left? Give yourself a day, midweek, to relax and recharge.

Aries
March 21st - April 20th
Time travel may not be physically possible but in your mind imagination has no bounds. Dare to think big. Listen to new offers and keep an open mind.

Taurus
April 21st - May 21st
Some things being asked of you may seem a stretch too far until you seriously think about it. Do you avoid something new and challenging because it seems too ambitious?

Gemini
May 22nd - June 21st
To be listened to this week you need to pick the right moment. A bit of fun brings your optimism springing back. Share the joy.

Cancer
June 22nd - July 23rd
Try to see the good side of making changes. Have the confidence to go ahead and use your talents to their fullest. You owe it to yourself.

Leo
July 24th - August 23rd
Try to avoid old habits that slow you down and make you feel low. There are those who want to be closer to you but are waiting for a signal. This is not a time to be introverted or shy.

Virgo
August 24th - September 23rd
Considering others is important to you but it is a time to put yourself first. Colleagues can be confused about their way ahead. Are you able to help them see more into the future?

Libra
September 24th - October 23rd

Happiness at a hospital wedding

A judge performed the wedding ceremony in the bride's room at the Quirónsalud Málaga hospital, where she is being treated for leukemia

Like so many other couples, Pilar and Héctor want to spend their lives together, make plans for the future and see them come to fruition. Having decided to get married, their wedding took place on Monday. However, this is where this couple differs from others. Pilar and Héctor didn't exchange their vows in a church, a registry office, on a beach or on board a ship. They were married in the Quirónsalud Málaga hospital, where Pilar is undergoing treatment for leukemia.

The civil ceremony took place in Pilar's room, which had been decorated especially for the occasion. The headboard of her bed had a big sign showing their names joined by hearts, and there were three wedding balloons and a bridal bouquet. The idea was to make the room look as festive and wedding-like as possible, and it succeeded. The ceremony was carried out by a judge, and Pilar and Héctor had a lovely day, filled with happiness, which they will never forget.

cepted without hesitation.

The wedding was attended by Héctor's two children as well as the couple's other family members and friends, and doctors and nurses who are treating the bride were also present. None of them wanted to miss such an important event in the couple's lives.

One of Héctor's sons lives in France, but as soon as his father told him last Friday that he and Pilar were getting married on Monday he immediately booked a flight so he could be there to share their special day.

"It was obvious how much Pilar and Héctor love each other, and love is a very effective medicine to combat illnesses," say sources at the Quirónsalud Málaga hospital. "The wedding was lovely, and it was a day to remember. We wish both of them every happiness."
