The Costa del Sol once again achieved historic tourism figures in 2019, breaking through the 13-million barrier with 4.2 per cent more visitors than the year before. The Diputación de Málaga, which is the provincial governing authority, says tourism generated 14.44 billion euros of income for the area: 7.84 billion directly and approximately 6.6 billion indirectly. This was a total increase of 1.92 per cent.

Margarita del Cid, the CEO of Turismo Costa del Sol, says employment in the tourism sector also increased to 179,000 jobs, which was 2.95 per cent more than in 2018. The body has increased its budget for this year by 23 per cent, with 7.6 million euros to be spent on promotion and 3.1 million on planning. As a key tourism sector, golf will receive 800,400 euros with the aim of increasing the number of tourists who come to the area to play this sport.

The vacation and leisure sector will receive 628,000 euros; business travel (the sector known as MICE) 369,100 euros; promotion of rural tourism 142,000 euros; actions in emerging markets, 418,000 euros; activities relating to smart tourism, 946,000 euros; and a further 543,000 euros have been allocated for multi-sector investment.

Del Cid says Turismo Costa del Sol will "continue to advance our principal aims, such as increasing expenditure to improve the profitability and employment in the tourism sector, attracting year-round tourism, smart tourism and digital transformation, opening new markets and generating a new Costa del Sol by developing and creating new resources".

In recent years the Costa del Sol has intensified its commitment to golf, a sport which attracts around 500,000 tourists a year to Andalucía. As a sector it is important because of the high spending power of those who play golf and also its ability to bring visitors to the region all year round. Efforts made in this field so far are beginning to pay off. The Costa del Sol was recognised as the best golf destination in Europe last year by the International Association of Golf Tour Operators (IAGTO), and was also exclusively designated the Official Golf Destination Continental Europe by the PGA of Germany.

Every year IAGTO gives awards to nominated golf resorts and destinations which offer the best experiences to their clients, based on client satisfaction, quality of the golf courses and accommodation, price-quality ratio, professional conduct of the suppliers, support for the local tourism industry and the availability of rounds of golf.

The award was announced during a prize-giving ceremony which was attended by more than 600 people during the principal fair for the sector, the International Golf Travel Market (IGTM). The event brought together 1,300 professionals from the golf travel industry in over 65 countries, including about 500 tourism suppliers from the sector, and more than 400 golf tour operators who collectively control 80 per cent of the world market for this sector.

Average spending

A report from the Diputación recently showed that tourists who

The Costa del Sol is home to around 70 per cent of all the golf courses in Andalucía. :: JOSELE-LANZA come to Malaga to play golf spend an average of more than 1,800 euros on their trip and stay for an average of 12.3 days. Sources at Turismo Costa del Sol say this is "a high standard sector and this is clearly reflected by the employment and wealth it generates, with around 17,700 jobs created directly or indirectly".

Nearly 70 per cent of the golf courses in Andalucía are in Malaga province, and that is also the highest concentration in Spain. It is also in third position, after Madrid and Barcelona, with regard to the number of licences, with more than 18,000 players.

With regard to the visitors who come to Malaga province to play golf, the majority are from the UK, Scandinavian countries, Germany and France, followed by players from other parts of Spain, the Netherlands, Portugal and Ireland.

In the last few years many clubs in Malaga have improved their facilities, and this has also resulted in an increase in the number of visitors. Experts say the strengths of Malaga as a golfing destination are its fame, as the Costa del Sol is known all over the world, its climate, the large number of courses and complementary facilities and the proximity of the principal source markets thanks to good air connections.

Professionals in the golf sector also stress the ability of the courses to convert highly degraded land into somewhere with a high environmental value, returning lost dignity to former rubbish tips and rubble dumping areas, and they point out that for years now it has been obligatory to use recycled water to irrigate the golf courses.

On the downside, the sector is still battling against the 21 per cent rate of IVA, which they say is disproportionate because it does not recognise the role played by golf in the tourism sector. The rate of IVA was increased by the Spanish government in 2012, from eight per cent to 21, a move which has been strongly criticised ever since.

With the increased budget, which includes sponsorship of major professional tournaments, Turismo Costa del Sol is hoping the number of visitors who come to the area to play golf will continue to increase in 2020.

Muñoz makes Malaga proud

The golfer became emotional when presented with the award by SUR: "You have no idea how much this means to me," she said

ALBERTO GÓMEZ

MALAGA. Azahara Muñoz will never forget 2019. The golfer from Malaga was part of the European team which won back the Solheim Cup against all expectations; she made the Top 10 on the American Tour, the hardest in the world, ten times; and she racked up another two on the European Tour in the only events she competed: the French Open and Spanish Open.

In December, to mark her efforts in joining the international golfing elite, Azahara was designated 'Malagueña of the Year' in the Sports category at the award ceremony presented by SUR and sponsored by Unica Banco. The golfer was the first to take the stage at the Palacio de Ferias y Congresos, watched by more than 1,500 people.

Her speech impressed the audience. After expressing her thanks to SUR, she recalled other times when she had been travelling and unable to attend the event. She then become emotional, for the first time: "You have no idea how happy I am to receive this award and how much it means to me," she said. "Thank you for also being nice enough to present it to me in the same year as Antonio Banderas!"

The actor, who won his award in the Cultural sector, returned the compliment a few moments later: "Thank you for giving me this prize in the same year as Azahara Muñoz," he said.

The golfer became emotional again when she referred to her family, who were in the audience. "We are like the Editorial department of a newspaper. We argue sometimes, but we are always there for each other, as they are here for me today. Thank you for the confidence you have shown in me since I was little, and for everything you do for me. For being there in good times and also in bad times, which is when I need you most. You have never let me get downhearted. I'm the one who takes the prizes home, but you have sacrificed so much more than I have."

These haven't been easy years for Azahara Muñoz. After a brush with the Top 10 in the world classification and tasting such sweet success as winning such important tournaments as the Sybase Match Play, fortune changed for the player from Malaga, who has won over six million dollars in prize money. She suffered injury and dropped several places in the ranking.

It took time for her to recover her game. She almost forgot what it was like to end championships high up on the score board. But then, she discovered why.

She was diagnosed with Hashimoto thyroiditis, which destroys the thyroid gland and is autoimmune. That problem lay behind her changes in weight, dry skin and hair loss, among other symptoms.

She returned to her lifelong trainer, Marcelo Prieto, after a brief separation. With her illness under control and everything in order once again, Muñoz has returned to being the player she once was, and now she is looking forward to the year ahead with her eyes on the championship.

Rahm ends his best year yet as number three in the world

The Spanish player achieved the second best score during the season, ending among the top ten in 17 tournaments, and now has his eyes set on being number one

JUAN LUIS GUILLÉN

Jon Rahm's career has done nothing but grow since he turned professional just three years ago. The remarkable Spanish player ended 2019 as number three in the world and crowned a season full of professional successes with some personal joy: his marriage to Kelley Cahill.

"Successes in my personal life will always mean a lot more to me than the professional ones. And I believe I have been more successful in my personal life than in golf. Kelley has helped me to improve as a person and that has definitely helped me to play better," said the golfer shortly before marrying the woman with whom he has shared his life since they met at Arizona State University.

While Jon was triumphing with the university golf team, Kelley, who has a degree in Biology, was in the athletics and tennis teams. "As an elite sportswoman herself, she understands the probably egotistical decisions we have to take," he says. Those decisions included resting for five weeks before becoming champion of the European Tour. "We spent those weeks at home. As we travel so much, I really appreciated those weeks," says Rahm, who loves where he lives and is probably the most American of the Spanish players.

This golfer from the Basque Country reached second place in the world ranking at one point and then returned to the Top Three after a few months out of the top positions. In 2017 he ended fourth. In 2018, sixth. And in 2019, third, behind Brooks Koepka and Rory McIlroy.

He now has his eye on top spot after a year in which he played in 25 tournaments, reaching the Top Ten in 17 of them, beaten only by McIlroy with 19. Rahm also became the winner of the European Tour, the first Spanish player to do so after Severiano Ballesteros. Last year he won two tournaments in the Rolex Series (the DP and Irish Open) and defended for the first time a title achieved in the previous season (the Spanish Open).

Although Rahm has put down roots in Arizona, where he has lived for nearly eight years, he has never lost his connection with Spain, who he will be representing in the Olympic Games: "It's always a good feeling to play for more than yourself. Although I don't think about it during the tournaments, I see it in the repercussions of what I do."

From her visits to Spain, Kelley treasures the memory of cones of paper filled with Iberian ham, txakoli wine, football matches at San

FAVOURITE GOLF COURSES

Like all players, Rahm has his favourite golf courses. "I started playing golf at the Club de Larrabea, which is complicated because it has numerous eleva- tions and undulations," he explains. "You never have the chance to hit a stroke or a putt on flat ground. All the greens have slopes and tall grass."

The Spanish player says the best course in the Bilbao area is Club de Golf de Neguri, "which is close to my home and right on the coast".

Olazabal, on the other hand, says he likes a bit of variety with regard to courses.

"There is a great combination of mountains and sea for tourists here," he says, "and if you want golf as well we have three completely different courses.

"One is inland, but we also have a real treasure, a nine-hole links-type course beside the sea. I think this area would suit anyone who loves golf".

Mamés stadium and New Year's Eve in the house of her partner's grandmother, eating grapes as the bells chime at midnight.

Following the wedding, the couple now have to focus on the sport again, and the sky appears to be the limit: "Being number one in the world is always on your mind. You have to want to get there, but also understand that it isn't a case of winning a tournament and becoming number one. It is the consequence of playing well and that is what you have to do, play well, and that's it," says Rahm.

He also loves good food and never misses a chance to enjoy the gastronomy of the Basque Country, the region in which he was born, beside neighbouring Cantabria, where the legendary Severiano Ballesteros grew up. Although it is no more than 8,000 square kilometers in size, the Basque

Country is famous for its cuisine and the town in which Jon Rahm was born, Barrika, on the outskirts of Bilbao, is in the heart of an area with the greatest concentration of Michelin stars in the world (at least 19). It is also home to the great Txakolí and Rioja wineries and some impressive golf courses.

Seve's course, the Real Club de Pedreña, is an hour to the west, while the double winner of the Augusta Masters, José María Olazábal, learned to play golf at the Real Club de San Sebastián, less than a 90 minute drive to the east.

"It's difficult to explain," says Rahm about what makes the local gastronomy so special. "I would say the abundance of raw materials. Most of the fish and other products you get here are local, and I don't mean from supermarkets".

The Basque player clearly has an appetite, and not just for golf titles.

Ciganda, Europe's best female player in 2019

The Spanish golfer ended the season with eight top tens and only missed the cut once in the 23 LPGA tournaments she played

:: ALBERTO GÓMEZ

MALAGA. Carlota Ciganda is still unstoppable. The Spanish player ended 2019 as the best European female player in the world classification, which was dominated by Asian and American golfers. She is in 16th place after an enviable season crowned by winning the LPGA's AON Risk, a triumph for the most aggressive player of the year which brought with it one million euros of prize money.

Ciganda, like Azahara Muñoz, contributed decisively to the European team's win over the USA in the Solheim Cup, the most important women's golfing event in the world, which has the same format as the Ryder Cup.

She completed a great season, reaching the Top Ten on the difficult American Tour and winning the Estrella Damm Mediterranean Ladies Open.

"It has been a very good year, especially because I continue to improve and that's really important, because the level of competition is increasingly high," she says.

She started the campaign in Australia with a modest place among the top 30, but bettered that soon afterwards in Thailand, achieving the first of her eight Top Ten finishes.

Unsurprisingly, the player from Pamplona only missed one cut in the 23 tournaments in which she competed on the difficult LPGA Tour in 2019.

This Spanish golfer, who has won over five million dollars in prize money on the LPGA alone, has proven to be one of the most solid on the professional tours, and is guaranteed a place for the European team in the Solheim Cup, a tournament she particularly enjoys and where she was very effective last year, paired with Azahara Muñoz.

This new year, her objectives are to win her first major tournament and come away from the Olympic Games in Tokyo with a medal. She is almost guaranteed a place, as is Azahara Muñoz.

Ciganda will be 30 years old this year, but her dreams remain intact, aware that golfers can continue to compete effectively for much longer than professionals in other sports. She is delighted to be the best female player in Europe, but it isn't enough. She wants to be the world number one. It is only a matter of time.

Larrazábal moves up over 100 points in the ranking

:: COSTA DEL GOLF

MALAGA. Pablo Larrazábal rose by 105 places in the world golf classification, from 261 to 156, after his victory in the Alfred Dunhill Championship in South Africa, which put an end to a stretch of four and a half years with no wins at all.

Larrazábal achieved his fifth triumph on the European Tour, where he had not won since the BMW International Open in June 2015. It was an epic win, but not without its problems for the Spanish player, who was suffering from muscular problems and blisters on his feet which made the last day difficult. However, Larrazábal plucked up his courage and made the most of his leadership, which he had maintained on the third day thanks to a round with 70 strokes, five birdies and three bogeys, for a total of 205.

He sealed his triumph with a card showing 75 strokes, thanks to a spectacular second part of the round in which he managed to consolidate the -6 he had achieved in the first nine holes. With a magnificent final putt, he achieved the final triumph, with -8, with a one stroke advantage over Swedish player Joel Sjöholm.

"When I got up this morning I really thought I wouldn't be able to play. I couldn't put my shoes on, I couldn't walk to the buggy, I couldn't go to the putting green. I really suffered today. After the ninth hole I could barely walk," he admitted after his win.

Sierra Nevada offers numerous attractions during the winter

The excellent connections enable visitors to combine a stay in the ski resort with golf on some of the best courses in Andalucía

DÍAZ

The Sierra Nevada ski resort began its new winter season in December with optimistic expectations and these have certainly been fulfilled. Granada city and the province are attractive to visit at any time of the year, because of the history, culture, gastronomy and sports, but in the winter they really come into their own because visitors can enjoy not only snow sports but also golf as well.

The 2019/2020 season began well, with 85 per cent occupancy over the long weekend in early December. This was a record in Spain, according to the Hoteles.net portal, which reported that the Sierra Nevada and Aramón Cerler ski resorts were the two destinations which registered the most bookings by visitors from elsewhere in Spain. The report also indicated that the prospects were good for the whole of the winter season.

This proved to be correct over Christmas, New Year and Three Kings Day, with an average occupancy up to 5 January of 80 per cent and some nights nearly full, especially the last days of the year when about 7,500 people decided they would like to bid farewell to 2019 on the ski slopes.

The resort organised numerous activities for its visitors over the Christmas period, including Santa Claus arriving on skis down the especially illuminated El Río piste on 22 December.

The bells rang to welcome in the New Year and the celebrations took place as usual, but perhaps the most popular event of all was on 5 January, when the Three Kings skied down El Río piste, accompanied by an extensive entourage of school pupils, clubs and ski and snowboard teams.

Nocturnal skiing down the illuminated El Río piste is one of the most popular activities at this ski resort in Granada, especially during holiday periods when there is high occupancy at Pradollano, as was the case up to 5 January.

When weather conditions permit, El Río is lit by around 30 spotlights which illuminate the 3.2 kilometres between the Borreguiles area and the residential

During the public holidays in early December, occupancy was around 85 per cent, which was in line with predictions

There are numerous golf courses in Granada province, including Santa Clara Golf, Los Moriscos and even one in the city

resort of Pradollano.

This winter, the ski station also introduced new functions for its mobile app, providing up to date information about snow conditions (pistes, ski lifts, weather, webcams). The Sierra Nevada app now also incorporates maps and trackers in three dimensions and an audioguide navigator.

Sierra Nevada also offers a multitude of recreational facilities, including restaurants with cuisine from all over the world, tapas bars, cafeterias, pubs, discotheques, cinema, heated swimming pool, spa and a magnificent sports club with modern facilities. The different hotels provide entertainment for children and adults.

In the Sierra Nevada you can have a go at playing 'snowgolf'. :: SUR

Huge efforts have also been made to make the Sierra Nevada ski station accessible for people with reduced mobility, so they can fulfill their dream and enjoy the snow and numerous other attractions at discounted prices.

Among the many activities available in the Sierra Nevada is golf in the snow. Golf on ice has almost all the same characteristics as traditional golf, although the surface on which it is played means there are considerable differences because playing on snow greatly complicates control of the ball and the cold air affects the way the ball moves and restricts it to about 80 per cent of the normal.

The balls are fluorescent orange so they can be seen on the snow, especially on the 'green', which of course in this format isn't green at all, because it is, literally, snow white.

Emblematic courses

The excellent communications between the Sierra Nevada ski resort and Granada city and the rest of the province means that golf tourists who want to play their favourite sport can do so on some of the local courses, such as the Granada Club de Golf, which is in a unique location on the boundary between the 'vega' plain and the 'secano', surrounded by small hills. It is situated near the village of Las Gabias, about eight kilometres from Granada. Designed and created by Ramón Espinosa and Emilio Mena, the course sits on a gentle hill, like a long island in the middle of the plain. There are two lagoons on the side which looks over the inland valley, and a third on the other side.

There is another course, Los Moriscos, which is links style, about eight kilometres outside Motril, in a sports complex close to the beach. Los Moriscos, which is 5,072 metres in length, is flat and adorned with palm trees and sugar cane. This course in Granada is characterised by its generous greens and large lagoons.

Another of the courses in Granada province is Santa Clara Golf Club, which was inaugurated in 2006 and is a spectacular 18-hole par 73 golf course, designed by Enrique Canales Busquets. It nestles in the town of Otura, about a ten minute drive from the historic centre of Granada and less than 30 minutes from the Sierra Nevada ski resort and the Costa Tropical.

The course at Santa Clara Golf Granada is characterised by its spacious greens, many movements and a great diversity of obstacles. This provides an opportunity to use a great variety of strokes, making it an ideal design for golfers with all types of handicap.

To sum up, Sierra Nevada is the ski destination par excellence, which also enables its visitors to enjoy some novel and classic varieties of golf, thanks to the proximity of several courses in the province.

No matter how you decide to spend your time in the Sierra Nevada, a visit to the city of Granada is essential because nobody should miss to its historic buildings and quaint streets full of charm, especially in winter.

In beautiful Granada city, everyone should take a walk along the Paseo de los Tristes, sample the gastronomy in its hundreds of taverns and bars, relax by the Fuente de las Batallas fountain, marvel at the Alhambra from the San Nicolás viewing point, wander around the streets of the ancient Albaicín district and admire the beauty of the high mountain peaks which surround this city, which is a truly magical place in an absolutely stunning setting.

The Andalucía Masters will be in spring

The tournament will take place in April instead of June and tickets are already on sale

:: ALBERTO GÓMEZ

MÁLAGA. Tickets are now on sale for the next edition of the Andalucía Masters, which will take place from 30 April to 2 May rather than in June. It has been moved because of the calendar for the Olympic Games this summer. The organisers decided to hold it just before the American Tour, to attract the best players.

The Masters is part of the European Tour, the second most important in world golf. At present none of the PGA Tour tournaments is taking place in Europe, although in Andalucía they are trying to obtain more sponsors and increase the prize money available. A bigger budget would also make it possible to offer some players advance payments. This would attract some of the stars of golf and expand a line-up which has included players in the top ten of the world classification in the past, such as Sergio García and Jon Rahm.

This is a difficult objective, but the organisers of the Andalusian championship do not want to place a ceiling on the event. The sponsorship agreement signed with Estrella Damm guarantees the presence of the tournament on the calendar for the next four years, although the changes to the PGA Tour calendar for this season because of the Olympics have upset all the plans of the European Tour. There are only three weeks between the US Open and the British Open, and now the World St. Jude Invitational has been incorporated in the first week of July. This means the Masters was left without a date in the summer, although the European Tour rescheduled it in the spring.

The tournament is well-known and hopes to become one of the trials for the Rolex Series, which demands at least seven million euros in prize money and offers around 40 points for the world classification, factors which would attract new golfers. The prize money for the tournament has already gone up to three million euros this year and the intention is to continue increasing it, a dream which could materialise soon and which would make it one of the most important sporting events in Spain.

Sergio García acts as host for the tournament through his foundation. :: SUR

The change of date could benefit the tournament which takes place at Valderrama, and it is offering reduced prices during these first weeks on sale. Tickets for the 'pro-am' cost seven euros for young visitors (under the age of 17) and are free for under-12s accompanied by adults. Adult tickets are nine euros, but it is possible to attend the first two days (Thursday and Friday) for ten euros. The prices for Saturday and Sunday are ten euros for youngsters and 15 euros for adults, or a weekend pass costs 20 euros. Young visitors who want to enjoy the 'pro-am' and the four days can do so for 30 euros, and adults for 55 euros.

The tournament is backed by the Junta de Andalucía, although the addition of Estrella Damm as a private sponsor has given the organisers a greater margin of movement in forthcoming years. It is also supported by the Foundation Sergio García. It is broadcast on television to more than 400 million homes on all five continents, and 41,494 fans enjoyed watching it in person last year.

VALDERRAMA, SERGIO GARCÍA TERRITORY

Valderrama is García territory. The Spanish player acts as host through his foundation and has already won the trophy on three occasions. He has a special relationship with the course, as he admits himself: "I love it. It is my favourite and I really want to try and do good things here. I like Augusta, because that's where I won my first major tournament, but what I feel for Valderrama is different. A piece of my heart is always here," he says. This year, he will be aiming to take the trophy home again.

A sustainable investment

The project, which has cost over nine million euros, will see recycled water supplied to 40 golf courses on the Costa

:: ANDREA JIMÉNEZ

MÁLAGA. The works to improve the recycled water network on the western Costa del Sol, so that this type of water can be used to irrigate all 40 golf courses in the area, have now been completed by the Acosol and Acuamed companies.

The improvement works, which have cost over nine million euros, began in 2015 and have included increasing the productive capacity of La Víbora treatment plant by 14,000 cubic metres a day.

The completed project was officially handed over last week, at a ceremony attended by Carlos Cañavate, who is the Director General of Acosol; Manuel Cardeña, the CEO of Acosol; Melchor Conde, the company's regional director for Infrastructure and Production; Francisco Barartech, the president of Acuamed; and Javier Alcántara, the regional director of Acuamed.

This was the final phase of the project to supply recycled water to all 40 golf courses in the area, and it means that the seven between La Siesta, on the eastern side of Mijas, and Río Real, west of Marbella, are now part of the system. Another five golf courses are waiting to be connected.

The pipes have been laid through the centre of Marbella so that in future recycled water can be used for parks and gardens as well.

The works were carried out in two phases. At La Víbora, double-layer sand filters and a rotating drum mesh filter have been installed. After filtering, the water then passes through a new pumping station, and up to 20,000 cubic metres a day can be produced.

Carlos Cañavate said this project is part of the company's commitment to the use of recycled water.

"We are focusing our attention on models of sustainability to enable us to meet the demand of the tourism sector, which has to be a priority. This year we have increased the capacity considerably, and that is how we plan to continue in the future," he explained.

Manuel Cardeña was also keen to point out that recycling is an essential way of saving water and is a vital part of the fight to protect the environment.

"Projects such as this are a clear demonstration of Acosol's unequivocal commitment to sustainable development," he said.
